THE TANTRĀLOKA

OF ABHINAVAGUPTA

with the Commentary of Jayaratha

NAVAJIVAN RASTOGI

The Tantrāloka—the magnum opus of Abhinavagupta, the tenth century stalwart and an Indian genius of all times from Kashmir, is both an inspiration and a challenge for the students of the tantric lore. No study on tantra should be deemed adequate unless it takes this celebrated text into account. Written on very scientific lines it offers a most uptodate (of course, till the time of Abhinavagupta), encyclopaedic and truly systematic analysis of the tantric material and, in the process, stands out as a model for modern research in an area of Indology which, though of vital importance, remains relatively unexplored. It also constitutes the single most important source of authentic tantric information and material comprising as it does the divergent fields of philosophy, sādhanā, yoga, literature, liturgy, ritual as well as historiography.

The work, originally published about half a century back (1918-1938) in KSTS in twelve volumes together with Jayaratha's celebrated commentary Viveka, has been out of print for well over a decade. The same is now reprinted here in eight volumes plus several new and immensely useful features. Besides the detailed kārikā-wise table of contents in Sanskrit and kārikā-index it features an exhaustive introduction together with four appendices bringing the complex yet organic character of this great and voluminous work into bold relief.

FOREWORD

Interest in the Tantric tradition of India is growing both amongst the scholars of Indology and the seekers of new dimensions of spirituality. In tantra, literally extension or expansion, reality is viewed as self-reflective consciousness manifesting the world as its play or sport; limitations or constraints of a human being and his situations are self-willed; he is master of his own destiny; freedom of knowledge and action is his nature and essence; there is no dichotomy between body and mind; the self within and the objective world outside can interact as one whole; social and religious distinctions of castes, creeds and sex, sacred and profane are imperfections which should be transcended in recognising the essential unity and divinity of the self and the not-self, the subject and the object, matter and spirit; the dynamism of reality comprehends and includes everything within, evolution and revolution, order and chaos; it is inclusive consciousness as there is nothing beyond it and outside it. This view of reality admitted into an integral whole the religion, philosophy and culture of the high and the low. Tantra became a meeting point of, and a bridge of understanding between, warring philosophical and religious opinions of Vedism, Purāṇism, Buddhism, Jainism and various sects and subsects that advocated new ways of life and thought and prescribed rites and rituals helping in the processes of divinisation of life and in realising the experience of freedom through the expansion of comprehensive consciousness. Ancient wisdom enshrined in the āgamas (the Tantric literature of massive growth), guidance of a perfect master (guru) and, above all, one's own understanding and experience of the spiritual pathways shaped the nature and style of a Tantric work such as the Tantrāloka of Abhinavagupta. No tradition (āgama), oral or written, or an intellectual formulation, such as by Bhartṛhari which was developed outside the strict confines of the Tantra systems upto the 10th Century A.D., is left untouched by the encyclopedic genius of Abhinavagupta. He has integrated all the ideas, entire Tantric tradition and the fund of spiritual experience into his Light on the Tantras, the Tantrāloka.

Importance of this work has been underlined by the author himself who declared that its study (abhyāsa and full understanding) turns the student into real Bhairava:

आह्निकानां समभ्यस्येत् स साक्षाद्भैरवो भवेत्
सप्तत्रिंशत्सु संपूर्णबोधो यद्भैरवो भवेत्

TA 1.284cd and 285ab

He further holds that the Tantric doctrine of great variety and significance (mahārtha) has been dealt with here on the basis of reasoning and the Śaiva scriptures after grasping the essence of the matter. The light on the Tantras will guide the world to traverse the spiritual pathway with ease and comfort:

स तन्निबन्धं विदधे महार्थं युक्त्यागमोदीरिततन्त्रतत्त्वम् ।
आलोकमासाद्य यदीयमेष लोकः सुखं सञ्चरिता क्रियासु ॥

TA 27.83

Tantrāloka is a Śāstra (प्रकटोऽयं गहनोऽपि शास्त्रमार्गः: TA 1.13) i.e., a systematic and well-structured treatise dealing with essential doctrines of entire Tantra literature (यदुक्तमस्मद्गुरुभिरशेषागमोपनिषदामालोके तन्त्रालोके, Uddyota on the Svacchandatantra, 7.169) which may be compared with the divine light of scriptures (Śaiva āgamas) which it expounds:

तन्त्राणां पारमेश्वराणामालोक इव आलोकः, तानि आलोकयति प्रकाशयति इति वा ।

—Viveka on TA 1.245cd

By the time Abhinavagupta wrote his Tantrāloka the characteristics and methodology of a scientific treatise (śāstra) were well-developed in India. This is evident from enunciation of elaborate and comprehensive principles of śāstric composition found in the Saṃhitās of Caraka and Suśruta, in the Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya and in the Yuktidīpikā, an anonymous commentary on the Sāṁkhyakārikā. The basic philosophical doctrines of the Trika and other systems dealt within the Tantrāloka are better known by now; but it is difficult to comprehend the kriyā aspect (which includes practical mysticism and rites and rituals) described therein, because much of its tradition is lost and various Tantric practices are no longer in vogue. Jayaratha who is a great help otherwise in understanding the text is many a time very brief on its intricate points. Even the author kept his text deliberately obscure specially when it dealt with secret esoteric rituals and practices (न पठ्यते रहस्यत्वात् स्पष्टैः शब्दैर्मया पुनः TA 29. 169ab) and even his commentator refrained himself from explaining the secrets so that there is no violation of keeping the tantric ritual secret from the general students (स रहस्यत्वात् समयभङ्गभयाच्च न इह अस्माभिः प्रदर्शितः Viveka on TA 29. 22ab). Moreover, the technical terms and symbols known to the votaries of a Sampradāya are no longer current and are likely to be misinterpreted by a modern scholar. R. Gnoli's Italian translation of the text has not been found useful by the scholars. All this presents a formidable difficulty to the students of this work. Jayaratha (See Viveka, concluding verse No. 2) prescribes knowledge of the entire āgamic literature, grammar, yogaśāstra, Mīmāṃsā, Nyāya (tarka), dualism and non-dualism as qualifications for the student of this work whereas Abhinavagupta (see TA I.337) laid emphasis on the freedom from the impurities, knowledge of the transcendental and the immanent reality, goodwill of Śiva for gaining a profound insight into his work. Deep learning of the Śāstras and unshakable devotion are thus essential prerequisites for taking up a study of the Tantrāloka.

Abhinavagupta was a mystic, a profoundly religious man, a scholar of great intellectual powers, a philosopher and a literary critic of great repute. He revolutionised Indian aesthetics by providing a strong and stable philosophical foundation. None before him thought of confirming the aesthetic experience of all art forms—poetry, music, dance, drama, etc. with mystic and religious states of ecstasy. It was in the scenic Valley of Kashmir of 10th century A.D. that essential unity of poetic, religious and philosophical experience was realised and cogently expressed by Abhinavagupta in his works on the Tantra, philosophy, dramaturgy and poetics. He visualised and established intimate associations between religion, philosophy and aesthetics. His description of a secret ritual, ādiyāga, involving sexual union with Dūtī, in the 29th chapter of the Tantrāloka uses key terms of his aesthetic theory, such as, rasa, carvaṇa, vikāsa, ānandaviśrānti, svātmacamatkāra. Participants in a mystic cakra are pūrṇasaṃvid and capable of tanmayībhavana (See TA 3. 240; 4. 209; 28. 18). The mystic experience of unity obtained through gradual practice of yoga is compared with theatre (TA 28.20). It is not our purpose here to detain the reader for long. But this will indicate how amply rewarding and satisfying can be the study of the Tantrāloka for the student of religion, mythology, philosophy, mysticism and aesthetics. Knowledge of the Śāstras and guidance by a teacher are valuable aids but these cannot substitute confirmation of the knowledge by one's own insight and experience. Self-experience is the ultimate truth:

आत्मप्रत्ययितं ज्ञानं पूर्णत्वाद्भूरवाप्यते ॥

—TA 4.47.

A critical edition and comprehensive study of this work remains a desideratum. This work published in KSTS edition was out of print for long. New manuscripts could not be procured for preparing new edition of the text. Mistakes which are, more or less, obvious to the discerning scholar either in printing or in admitting a variant indicated by Jayaratha in his Commentary occasionally, or found otherwise in the manuscripts used by the editor of the KSTS edition could be corrected and the numbering of the Kārikās could be done scientifically. But this was not undertaken out of the fear that this will delay the issuing of the work which is in great demand and that the feeble benefit may be counter-balanced by new printing mistakes which might creep in if this large work is composed afresh from a Press copy prepared by us. Thus the text has been reprinted but useful aids have been provided to the reader by way of lengthy table of contents in Sanskrit and various indexes. The Tantrāloka issued now by the MLBD in eight volumes will thus be found more useful. Its usefulness is further marked by Dr. Navjivan Rastogi's Introduction to the Tantrāloka.

Many texts published in the Kashmir Sanskrit Series are out of print. No new works are being published from Kashmir. Even the rare and out of print works are not being re-issued from there. In this sorry state of affairs, we owe a deep and profound sense of gratitude to our Publishers and more particularly to Shri N.P. Jain and Shri J.P. Jain for undertaking the publication of the Tantrāloka in eight volumes. It was beset with many difficulties and the original schedule could not be kept. For this we crave indulgence of our readers and hope that this will prove first step in making available all the old and rare texts of Kashmir Śaivism.

The whole project is planned as under :

Vol. I-Foreword, Introduction including 4 appendices; Vol. II-Text of the Tantrāloka and Viveka, Āhnikas 1-3; Vol. III-Āh. 4-7; Vol IV-Āh. 8-9; Vol. V-Āh. 10-14; Vol. VI-Āh. 15-27; Vol. VII-Āh. 28-33; Vol. VIII-Āh. 34-37 plus indices of kārikās and quotations occurring in the commentary. The text in each Volume is preceded by a comprehensive Viṣayānukramaṇikā.

PREFATORY NOTE

When I accepted the proposal of the publishers to contribute an introduction to the Tantrāloka some time back, I welcomed the opportunity to reacquaint myself with the most towering personality of the medieval India. But, when face to face with the text, I could easily gather that it was a sheer case of overestimation of my capacities. In addition to other failings I was confronted with one very serious handicap. I did not know Italian into which R. Gnoli translated the *Tantrāloka. This has remained a constant drawback. Shortage of time was another major

* I am extremely thankful to Prof. Harvey P. Alper of the Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas who very kindly provided an English rendering of the table of contents from Gnoli's translation. I reproduce below the relevant portion of Prof. Alper's letter of the 15th July, 1983 verbatim—

"The most important thing to note about the introduction to the TĀ is that the vast bulk of it is drawn virtually verbatim from the earlier and longer introduction to the TS! Below I provide a table in which the left hand column lists the sub-sections of the TĀ Introduction, the middle column lists the pages in Gnoli's translation where they appear, while the third column lists the pages from the Introduction to the TS from which they have been taken. Frankly I don't think that this speaks very well of Gnoli: did he have nothing new to say? does he really think that the TĀ is identical in all respects to the TS—in spite of the vast difference in length?

The bibliographical information on the TĀ translation is: Luce delle Sacre Scritture (Tantrāloka) di Abhinavagupta (Classici delle religioni, sezione prima: le religions orientali) Torino: Unione Tipografico-editrice torinese, 1972.

handicap. As the Tantrāloka is the magnum opus of Abhinavagupta, one of the greatest Indian encyclopaedic thinkers of all times, all that I have been able to do is to touch the outer fringe alone of his great contribution.

The Tantrāloka is both an inspiration and a challenge for the students of the tantric lore. It is an indispensable guide and no study on tantra should

Similarly Goudriaan's following remark about Gnoli's translation is quite illustrative—

"Trsl. into Italian by Raniero Gnoli; Luce delle Sacre Scritture, Torino 1972, a pioneer work of great merit, although the translator allowed himself too much freedom on some points, While in some cases he paraphrases Jayartha's comments without noticing the reader."

be deemed complete if it does not take the Tantrāloka into account. Written on very scientific principles it offers a most uptodate (of course till his period), extremely comprehensive and truly systematic account of the tantric material and thereby offers a model for modern research. It also constitutes the most important single source of authentic tantric information and material. It poses an enormous challenge when it comes to identify the sources cited and decide on their precise whereabouts and the issues involved. A detailed and critical study of the Tantrāloka is, therefore, desperately needed for which this Introduction cannot even be a poor substitute. However, being guided by Abhinava's own maxim[1] that each small step forward brings us nearer the goal, an humble attempt is contemplated in the following pages. At the moment, besides Gnoli, there is only one study that addresses itself to the study of the Tantrāloka proper.[2] Since this study is limited to first three Āhnikas and does not examine other aspects than the philosophical, most of the Tantrāloka remains practically unexplored. There are three other studies[1] which merit special mention here. Pandey and myself have constantly dwelt on the Tantrāloka, but the whole exercise becomes of secondary importance because it is Abhinavagupta or Krama system, as the case may be, that is being studied and not the Tantrāloka and as such, only the relevant material is being referred to. For example, Pandey's mainstay are the 1st to 5th and 29th Āhnikas, while mine are the 1st, 4th, 13th and 30th. Goudriaan's observations are important, but he takes up the Tantrāloka for a very brief treatment.[2] Recently a major work that has come to our notice is the Upodghāta (Sanskrit introduction to the Luptāgamasaṁgraha[3] by B.V. Dwivedi). It comes as an appendix to the first two volumes of the Luptāgamasaṁgraha which are the compilation of citations from the Āgamas in various sources and has assumed the form of an introduction to the 2nd Volume. The Upodghāta deals, inter alia, with the citations in the Tantrāloka and the Tantrālokaviveka. In the first part Dwivedi's perspective is primarily historical while in the 2nd he deals with the doctrinal/theoretical issues in a wider tantric framework. Although the Tantrāloka is not Dwivedi's immediate problem, his study throws sufficient light on many aspects particularly the historical one. We shall have occasion to refer to these works as and when necessary.

In this Introduction an attempt is made only to introduce the principal work. It should be treated as an elementary study of some of the material which appeared to me more important to begin with. I have taken special precaution to confine myself to the contents of the Tantrāloka proper and allow the conclusions emerge on their own. How far I have succeeded in my efforts, it is for the scholars to judge.

The foregoing pages as well as the following appendices that comprise the Volume One of the Tantrāloka are, in fact, a part reproduction of the author's larger work entitled Introduction to the Tantrāloka: A Study in Structure and brought out by the present publishers. While the basic corpus of the two texts remains more or less identical, the present volume is smaller in size dispensing as it does with several appendices contained in the original volume for reasons of space and immediate relevance.

As the new edition (text reprinted by MLBD) was not available when the printing of the Introduction began, all the references to the text appearing here were made to the volumes of the KSTS edition. This however, would have turned vexatious for the reader of the new edition. It was, therefore, thought desirable and expedient to have references to both the editions e.g., KSTS as well as MLBD, so that the entire community of readers—those who possess the KSTS edition and those who own the MLBD one--may be equally benefitted. All the relevant appendices, accordingly, have been re-done. This development has put the publication somewhat behind the original time-schedute.

In the absence of a critically edited text (the editors of the enlarged reprinted edition have not attempted a critical edition of the text for various reasons) some other problems have also surfaced. In the Kārikā-wise table of contents i.e., Viṣayānukramaṇikā in Sanskrit accompanying each volume, marking of numbers has been a difficult affair. Abhinava has scruplously adhered to what Jayaratha calls Sañcaya-nyāya (see pp. 76, 164 inside) even in between the individual Kārikās. He usually introduces the next idea in the second half-verse. I have, therefore, followed the practice of the editors of the KSTS edition (retained by the editors of the reprinted edition as well) and have alluded to the subject-matter as being denoted by the existing printed numbering even if the idea has continued upto the first half of the next verse or has already exhausted itself in the second half of the preceding verse. The reader will kindly bear with the occasional over- or under-lapping of certain ideas which has been unavoidable under the circumstances. Exceptions have been made only when I was sure of the completion of an idea in the particular Kārikā/s. In this context a further observation may be of some help. Here the basic thrust has been marked by twin objectives—one, it should give a precise idea of the content of the Kārikā/s concerned and two, even a cursory peep into the table should unravel the underlying thematic progression of the concepts independently of the text. An earnest effort has been made to secure both these ends but, in all fairness, it must be acknowledged that even the limited success has been far from easy to achieve. It is particularly true of the thirty-first Āhnika which has proved most enigmatic.

I have been increasingly conscious of the fact that this Introduction has turned out to be an introduction to the study of the Tantrāloka, instead of being an introduction to the text itself. In sum, the present endeavour has crystalized into a sort of more or less structural analysis and a groundwork, as it were, for more intensive future investigation in this area.

Before I wind up I must take this opportunity to thank Jain Brothers (M/s. N.P. & J.P.), Partners of M/s Motilal Banarsidass, for affording me an opportunity to pay once again my tribute to the all-time genius called Abhinavagupta and study a little bit of his magnum opus. I am deeply indebted to Prof. Braj Vallabha Dwivedi, the retired Head, Yoga & Tantra Department, Sampurnanand Sanskrit University, who was extremely generous in sending the proof-copy of his Upodghāta to the Luptāgama-saṁgraha. I am also thankful to him for discussing the proposed format and scope of the Introduction, although I am guilty of not using some of his suggestions with regard to the discussion on philosophical/doctrinal matters. My reasons for eschewing philosophical issues are simple. Something must be said over and above what has already been said by Pandey and other learned scholars. With the limited amount of time at my command it was not possible to make such a deep study as is demanded by philosophical and theoretical issues. I am indeed beholden to late Thakur Jaidev Singh, a great authority of our times on Kashmir Śaivism, for offering his valuable suggestions about the proposed direction and contents of the Introduction. Prof. H. P. Alper of the Southern Methodist University, USA has put me under a dept by discussing the proposed format and agenda of the Introduction and for finding time to translate 'contents' of Gnoli's Introduction to his celebrated translation. In this context I am happy to record my appreciation of the kind gesture of Dr. Andre Padoux (Director, Centre National De La Recherche Scientifique, Paris) in presenting a copy of Naudou's valuable book to me. I must remember two more scholars with gratitude. It was Dr. Ashok Kumar Kalia's (my esteemed colleague in the Department of Sanskrit, Lucknow University) idea to furnish all available information in respect of the texts cited by Abhinava and Jayaratha. Dr. Mark Dyczkowski, then camping in India, made this work easier by allowing me to have a photostat copy of the relevant extracts from some of the MSS - catalogues, so assiduously compiled by him. As a result the Appendix One was completely revised for which I once again thank these two friends. Dr. Kalia has also earned my gratitude for going through the entire Table of Contents (Viṣayānukramaṇikā in Sanskrit) and suggesting various improvements. The list will remain incomplete witho ut mention of my esteemed friends, Professors Harsh Narain (of late Visiting Professor of Philosophy, Aligarh University) and Kameshwar Nath Misra (Central Institute of Higher Tibetan Studies, Sarnath) and Dr. J. P. Sinha (my senior colleague in the Department of Sanskrit, Lucknow University) for maintaining sustained and constructive interest in the progress of the work. I also sincerely thank Drs. K.S. Pandey, H.S.B. Sinha and Sri K.M. Vishnoi for valuable secretarial assistance. Besides, I remember Dr. M. R. Yadav with affectionate gratitude for his manifold selfless cooperation.

This Introduction is now being humbly placed before the discerning judgement of the scholars for what it is worth with a citation from Tantrāloka itself :

CHAPTER ONE

EXPLORING THE TANTRĀLOKA

Strange as it may appear, the Tantrāloka happens to be the only major 'original' work of Abhinava while his all other important works[1] come to us in the form of a commentary on some earlier valuable text notwithstanding his own description of the Tantrāloka as a gloss, as we shall see in the sequel.

(i) Traditional Approach to the Tantrāloka

A peep into and a look around the Tantrāloka offers many illuminating insights. Towards twelfth century Śivānanda, the author of the Ṛjuvimarśinī, refers to it as the Trika-sāstra[2] or Trika-sāraśāstra[3] and the verses cited are traceable to the published edition of the Tantrāloka. It, therefore, appears that by that time it came to be regarded as the most representative text of Trika system. Kṣemarāja, the illustrious pupil of Abhinavagupta, talks of two characteristics of the text. One, it was composed in the state of Absolutic trance[4] and other, it is a key to the secrets of entire agamic literature.[1] In the Tantrasāra, Abhinavagupta invariably describes the Tantrāloka as a detailed treatise and asks the author to turn for detailed discussion of the problem to the latter which incorporates all the prescriptive and negative injunctions emanating not only from Vedic but from Śaiva, Tantra and Trika sources also.[2] The view has been consistently hammered again and again.[3] According to the Tantrasāra, the Tantrāloka was not only a repository of agamic lore but a critical text which minutely recorded even internal and mutual divergences.[4] Thus the image of the Tantrāloka as a single, extra-comprehensive and authoritative source book appears to have been projected by Abhinavagupta himself. The central theme of the Tantrāloka, according to Abhinavagupta in his Locana[5], however revolves round the transcendental Absolutic reality called Brahman (i.e. Anuttara). The prime concern of the Tantrāloka was to explain, to unfold and to explore. It therefore assumed the form of a gloss, or a commentary and was therefore termed as the Vārtika[1] (gloss), Śloka-vārtika[2] (versified gloss) and Śaḍardhaślokavārtika (versified gloss on Trika system).[3] Possibly in designating the Tantrāloka as Vārtika Abhinavagupta was inspired by Kātyāyana's example in whose case Vārtika is defined as "an explanatory or supplementary rule which explains the meaning of that which is said, of that which is left unsaid, and of that which is imperfectly said."[4] This amply applies to the Tantrāloka as we shall have occasion to see later. Elsewhere in a very significant remark Abhinavagupta describes the Tantrāloka as a mix of all the varieties (e.g. brief, regular and large) of glossarial work based on Āgamas. Thus it is a Vārtika, a Bhāṣya and a Vṛtti all at

2. अन्वर्थं चात्र दर्शितं तन्त्रालोके श्लोकवार्तिके च । Ibid., pp. 106-7
The use of 'ca' is very ambiguous and may lead one to conclude that the Tantrāloka and Ślokavārtika were two independent texts (vide K.T., p. 159). But in view of the overwhelming collateral textual evidence as produced above and non-discovery of any text by the name of the Ślokavārtika (pertaining to K.S.) so far it seems appropriate to identify the two. My earlier view on this stands modified (vide K.T., p. 159). In such a situation the text is to be construed as under—a time.[1] It is perhaps the reason why Abhinava's interpretations-cum-explanations on specific issues in the Tantrāloka are recalled as testimony.[2] The Tantrāloka was also known as Tantrāvaloka.[3]

अन्वर्थं चात्र दर्शितं श्लोकवार्तिके तन्त्रालोके च ।

(ii) Four motives behind the composition

(a) SAṀGRAHA-GRANTHA

Abhinavagupta composed the Tantrāloka from several angles. Obviously the first and the most striking intention of his is to present a digest of the available tantric literature and lore.[4] Technically, therefore, the Tantrāloka is a compendium (Saṁgraha-grantha)[5]. In creating a compendium Abhinavagupta's primary objective seems to handle not only the Trika material alone in its tantric sources, but the non-Trika material in its agamic sources as well.[6] Abhinavagupta himself sets at rest all conjectures in this regard. His avowed intention is to introduce all the agamic material in its varied sources[7]. Abhinavagupta has been, therefore, quite appropriately hailed as Saṁgrahakāra[1] and the Tantrāloka as the Saṁgraha[2] by Jayaratha.

(b) Prakriyā or Paddhati Grantha

Abhinavagupta's second, but rather more significant, intention is to produce a Prakriyā or Paddhati, perhaps employed as interchangeable terms in the context. Abhinavagupta was perturbed over the fact that there was no Paddhati text in his source-system, i.e. the system of transcendental triad (Anuttara-ṣaḍardhārthakrama), although there were plenty of them in other source systems.[3] In order to overcome this drawback he decided to write the present Prakriyā i.e., Tantrāloka, complete in all respects.[4] Abhinavagupta and Jayaratha both do not give any clue to Abhinavagupta's concept of a Prakriyā-grantha, although Jayaratha is full of references to Abhinavagupta's professed aim to undertake a Prakriyāgrantha.[5] In this context one comes across four observations:

(i) The Prakriyā under reference namely, the Tantrāloka, is totally based on the M.V.T;[6]

Jayaratha's introductory observation preceding the above verse is very suggestive—

ननु इह त्रैयम्बिकैव मठिका वक्तुं न्याय्या यद्द्वारा अस्य शास्त्रस्य आयातिः किं मठिकान्तरव्यावर्गनेनेत्याशंक्याह T.A.V., VIII, p. 3679

5. ननु सामान्येन त्रिकदर्शनप्रक्रियाकरणं प्रतिज्ञाय. . . . . । T.A.V., II, p. 35
6. न तदस्तीह यन्न श्रीमालिनीविजयोत्तरे । T.A. 1.17

(ii) There were two Prakriyās within the monistic fold namely, Kula-prakriyā and Tantra-prakriyā;

(iii) Kula Prakriyā is superior of the two;[1] and both together represent Trikaprakriyā;

(iv) A sizable section of the learned scholars subscribing to the system but not possessing uninterrupted tradition required a guide in respect of the matters they did not know. The Tantrāloka's composition as Prakriyā was a significant step towards fulfilling this desideratum.[2]

Now let us see what the Tantrāloka as a Prakriyā text means. If we compare the T.A. 1.14 and 1.15, we find that Prakriyā and Paddhati denote the same thing. Another thing to be noted is that both terms stand for a particular class of books. Naturally the grammarian's usage of Prakriyā in the sense of an etymological work does not fit in here. The Vācaspatyam includes among its meanings a chapter or a section (Prakaraṇa) which lays down an order[3] and the Śabdakalpadruma interprets it as a "definite procedure"[4] (Niyatavidhi). Similarly, Paddhati is taken to stand for a treatise that brings out the gist or the essential meaning. The Vācaspatyam[1] and Śabdakalpadruma[2], both lexicons agree and both cite Hemacandra[3] in support. Thus we see that according tc these lexicographers a Prakriyā text constitutes a work or a section thereof composed to convey the essential purport of the subject and to lay bare the procedure, if any, involved in realizing the primary purpose. A close examination of Abhinava will reveal that his concept of the Prakriyā or Paddhati was closer to the above definition.

Abhinava refers to the P.T.V. as Anuttaraprakriyā.[4] It will simply amount to saying that the P.T.V. was also a Prakriyā-grantha.[5] Abhinava's use of the word Prakriyā elsewhere reminds[6] one of something relat-

Vācaspatyam, Vol. V, p. 4225

2. "ग्रन्थार्थबोधकग्रन्थः" इति हेमचंद्रः ।
Śabdakalpadruma, Part III, p. 40

3. Hemacandra's observations as per footnotes above assume significance because Hemacandra was quite close to Abhinava chronologically—a gap of a century obtained between the two—and was in know of Abhinava's works as his treatment of Rasa in the Kāvyānuśāsana betrays unmistakeable impact of Abhinava's Abhinavabhāratī.

4. अनुत्तरप्रक्रियायां वैतत्येन प्रदर्शितम् । T.A. 9.313

5. A question may naturally arise as to whether there were two Prakriyās on Anuttaratrika System, because as Abhinava has already said, that (vide Fn. 3, p.5 supra) there were no Prakriyā texts or Paddhatis on his system. The answer perhaps lies in the fact that, as we shall see later, the P.T.V., M.V.V. and T.A. constitute one whole and as such may be part of a larger textual framework.

ing to practice or Sādhanā. The idea becomes clearer when Abhinava concludes that in the SV.T. knowledge does not involve action or practice.[1] Jayaratha leaves no doubt that the mutual difference between the several Tantras, even though sometimes belonging to the same sect, stems from the practices enjoined.[2] This leaves us in no doubt that Prakriyā must have meant a special practice—intra- and trans-ritualistic both—and the text that lays down the relative code is a Prakriyā-grantha. The other term used in this context by Abhinava is Paddhati, as we all know. What was his model we do not know. However he refers to one Paddhati by Īśānaśiva[3] which clearly brought out the essential procedure as laid down in the famous Krama Āgama Devyāyāmala. This Īśānaśiva is, no doubt, different from his namesake author of the Gurudevapaddhati or Tantrapaddhati and who definitely flourished after 1073 A.D. and was, according to Dwivedi, identical with the great-grand teacher of Somaśambhu, the author of the Karmakāṇḍa-kramāvalī.[1] Dharmaśiva, a teacher of Abhinava—if we go by the authority of Kṣemarāja[2]—also wrote one Paddhati which had the 'indirect initiation' as its central theme and it is which has been referred to by Abhinava[3], though not by name. These are possibly the Paddhatis whose presence led Abhinava to lament the absence of one in his own system. The Siddha-siddhānta-paddhati, the famous text of Nātha cult, which is much later, a text full of references to Pratyabhijñā system, similarly seems to be a work in Paddhati tradition. Dwivedi refers to several Paddhatis such as the Udayākarapaddhati[4] and Varuṇa Paddhati[5] and Maheśvarānanda in his M.M.P. refers to one Mahānayapaddhati.[6] It may be, therefore, quite logical to conclude that the Tantrāloka was a text in Paddhati or Prakriyā tradition and was composed as a complete manual for the adherents of the Trika way of life.

(c) Śāstra Grantha

The third intention of Abhinava was to project the Tantrāloka as a full-fledged Śāstra (scripture) or Śāsana.[7] As such it turned out to be a Prakriyā Śāstra

(i) T.A. 1.1 to 1.5— अभिधेयम्=त्रिकार्थः (it is manifold).

इह गलितमलाः परावरज्ञाः शिवसद्भावमया अधिक्रियन्ते।

The same may well be compared with the second concluding verse of the Viveka—

योऽधीती निखिलागमेषु पदविद् यो योगशास्त्रश्रमी
यो वाक्यार्थसमन्वये कृतरतिः श्रीप्रत्यभिज्ञामृते।

Abhinava makes it abundantly clear that such a 'competent' person is difficult to locate—

एतावत्यधिकारी यः स दुर्लभ इति स्फुटम्॥ T.A. 35.43

4. Jayaratha does not suggest the specific portions and their explications from the T.A. on this issue, but they are too patent to require an authoritative citation.

(v) T.A. 1.6—उपलब्धौ संभवद्विघ्ननिरासाय गणेशवटुकयोः स्तुतिः[1]

(d) Stuti Grantha

The fourth and the final approach consists in Abhinava's contemplation of the Tanrāloka as a full scale Stuti (prayer hymn). In the concluding part of the initial sentence[2] as well as in the ultimate verse[3] Abhinava leaves no ambiguity about his intention. Whenever he gets an opportunity he grabs the occassion to project the devotional theme of the Tantrāloka. In his eyes the entire subject matter of the Tantrāloka acquires meaning when it leads one to attain Śivahood owing to His grace alone. The Tantrāloka outlines the path and procedure to invoke such divine grace and once it is attained the clouds of nescient doubts disappear and one shines in one's pristine splendour.[4] Such an approach lends credence to the views of many a modern scholar who takes Kashmir Saivism as theology or transcendental theology hoping to reach and realize the personalistic Godhead and not as a pure metaphysics concentrating on an abstract Absolute. It is only from this deep religious point of view that the Prakriyā character of the Tantrāloka can be more meaningfully explained. Possibly this is the significance of this view being vouched in the beginning and in the end (Uparkrama and Upasaṁhāra, to put it traditionally) of the Tantrāloka.

(iii) Five objectives behind the composition of the Tantrāloka

(a-i) Attainment of Bhairavahood

After examination of the underlying motives of Abhinava a study of Abhinava's objectives behind his composition of the Tantrāloka will be immensely helpful. The fundamental aim is the same as that of his philosophical discipline in general. It is the achievement of Bhairavahood i.e., the divination of the mundane. Abhinava proudly declares that one who constantly practises all the tenets of thirtyseven Āhnikas is oneself transformed into Bhairava, the Absolute.[1] If a consistent perusal of 37 chapters leads to one's attainment of essential divinity, it is all the more reason to conclude that the microscopically finite being is capable of attaining cosmic personality.

(a-ii) Propounding fourfold redemtive knowledge

Abhinava is never tired of reiterating his preferences. He says that the original commitment of the Tantrāloka is to understand the nature of Absolute Awareness[2].

1. इति सप्ताधिकामेनां त्रिशतं यः सदा बुधः ।
   आह्निकानां समभ्यस्येत्स साक्षाद् भैरवो भवेत् ॥

   यत्तत्राद्यं पदमविरतानुत्तरज्ञप्तिरूपं तन्निर्णेतुम् . . . .॥ Ibid. 2.1

The four varieties of redemptive knowledge, as discussed in the Tantrāloka, are primarily designed to master both the worldly accomplishment and the spiritual transcendence.[1] While making a passing reference in his Locana,[2] as we had occasion to note earlier, Abhinava finds the transcendental Godhead as occupying the central focus of the Tantrāloka. It is descent of His grace (Śaktipāta) that alone constitutes the driving force for the aspirant's movements and it is why the problems of bondage and emancipation assume a kind of primacy over other issues.[3] Abhinava goes on positing that the basic purpose of the Tantrāloka is inculcation of the 'intuitive awareness'[4] (Prātibha-saṁvitti) which once thoroughly inculcated transforms the discursive perspective of mankind into the unitive one.[5] Abhinava (and his commentator Jayaratha also) refutes the charge of being arrogant in self-eulogy, as to him it is just a statement of facts.[6]

(b) Presenting the Ultimate Textual Authority

This brings us to another objective of Abhinava in presenting the Tantrāloka as the ultimate textual authority. Self-realization is the goal of all spiritual disciplines and the standard effective tool conceived by them is the power of the Godhead. No other text has been able to drive this truth home more than the Tantrāloka and the reason for it lay in Abhinava's taking recourse to his own discerning judgement, unfailing sense of right logic, vast command over Śaivistic scriptures and above all his deep insight into Trika ideology, in that order.[1] All these combined together lent enormous width and intense depth to Abhinava's treatment. Knowledge in order to earn transcendence has to pass through three successive stages:

(i) it must emanate from a scripture;
(ii) it must be thoroughly investigated under a knowledgeable guide; and
(iii) it must ultimately form basic core of one's experience.[2]

Jayaratha throws a veiled hint that Abhinava's intellectual/spiritual equipment very much betrayed such a wholistic framework of mind.[3] Under such circumstances the Tantrāloka could not but become the most ideal, complete and reliable textual authority. We are, therefore, tempted to suggest that three-fold epistemic methodology consisting of verbal testimony, reasoning and perception (Āgama, Yukti and Pratyakṣa) emerged from the triple sources of agamic understanding—scripture, guide and self.

1. इति यज्ज्ञेयसतत्त्वं दर्श्यते तच्छिवाज्ञया ।

2. यत: शास्त्रक्रमात्तज्ज्ञगुरुप्रज्ञानुशीलनात् ।

3. While commenting on T.A. 7.1 (इति कालतत्त्वमुदितं शास्त्रसुखागमनिजानुभवसिद्धम्) Jayaratha explains सिद्धम् as "यत: शास्त्रक्रमात् भैरवायते ॥" इत्याद्युक्त्या पारिपूर्ण्येन लब्धसिद्धिरिति (सिद्धीति ?) शिवम् । T.A.V., III, p. 1291

(c) Easy comprehension of the tantric wisdom

Easy comprehension of the tantric wisdom was the third objective of Abhinava.[1] It was from this point of view that he concentrated mainly on those issues or opinions which would be useful for all. Not that he shunned controversial issues rather, on the contrary, he took them up in his other works for a specialist's treatment.[2]

(d) Restoration and preservation of the tradition

A careful look into the Tantrāloka brings out one more objective which is however treated by Abhinava in a low key. His three references, one (Sampradāyojjhitaiḥ)[3] in the beginning and two others (Viḍambitāḥ[4] and Bhraṣṭe Viddhau[5]) in the middle of the Tantrāloka are quite conspicuous by their mention.

In the first, Abhinava seems to suggest that there were people who, though learned, were deprived of the uninterrupted tradition and hence did not have access to the doctrinal secrets. In the second, he hints at the existence of the people who were neither conversant with the text nor had waited upon the teacher for guidance. As such, being easily misled by the similarity of expression, they showed considerable gap in their knowledge. In the third, he implies that in certain sections the traditional secrets or specific procedures were lost or corrupted beyond recognition. In the first and second case, he undertook to propound the traditional wisdom inherited by him and in the third, he enjoins alternative course to be followed by taking recourse to the assignment (Nyāsa) called Mālinī. Jayaratha's observation, that whenever Abhinava quotes an agamic authority and recites a particular reading he does so to remove any misgivings about that source,[1] further strengthens the above premises. The foregoing discussion leads us to conclude that one of the undeclared objectives of Abhinava is to restore and preserve the existing and traditionally acquired tantric literature and practices. We will have to say something on this aspect again while examining his style and method.

From the above noted account we note that Abhinava's motives and objectives could be classified into two groups i.e., the one declared and the other undeclared, and may be briefed as under:

1. इह....स्वकण्ठेनैव पाठेऽयमाशयो—यदत्र बहूनि शास्त्रान्तरेष्वसमंजसानि पाठान्तराणि संभवन्ति—इति श्रोतॄणां मा भूत्संमोहः ।

Motives

(a) DECLARED

To compose the Tantrāloka
(i) as a compendium,
(ii) as a manual,
(iii) as a prayer.

(b) UNDECLARED

(i) To produce a scripturistic treatise (Śāstra).

Objectives

(a) DECLARED

(i) (a) To realise self and make others realise the same,
(b) To propound fourfold redemptive knowledge,
(ii) To afford easy comprehension of the abstruse traditional secrets.

(b) UNDECLARED

(i) To devise an-overriding textual authority,
(ii) To restore the tantric learning and practices.

CHAPTER TWO

(ABHINAVAGUPTA)

(i) Biographical data

It will be appropriate if we begin with the biographical data as made available by Abhinavagupta in the Tantrāloka. Abhinavagupta gives graphic details of his ancestry, parentage, teachers, pupils and circumstances under which the Tantrāloka was written.[1]

(a) NAME

According to the Tantrāloka Abhinavagupta was not his actual name. It was a title which he earned from his teachers in recognition of his devotion to and reflection upon Śiva.[2] This fact has already been emphasized earlier[3] where, according to Jayaratha, his name implied authoritativeness.[4] Abhinavagupta is never tired of repeating this fact. He calls himself competent.[5] This leads to the natural conclusion that he alone was competent to undertake a work like Tantrāloka which was professedly a digest of the entire Ṣaḍardha (lit. half of six i.e., Trika) scriptural literature.[1] Abhinava's academic, intellectual, spiritual and yogic attainments were of very high order. The very nature of his physical birth, in the tantric parlance, underlies this. In the first verse itself which refers to his parents he suggests his Yoginībhūtva[2] (i.e., arising from Yoginīs.). Such a suggestion assumes added significance in the context of the Tantrāloka whose committed goal, as we have seen, is to enable the listener-aspirant achieve Bhairavahood (Absolutic being). Here the parents achieve Bhairavahood which is transmitted to progeny.[3] Thus there is very suggestive relationship between his birth and composition of the Tantrāloka. This view gets strengthened by another remark of Jayaratha. In the thirteenth Āhnika while discussing the various kinds of fall of

2. Yoginībhū is a typical Kula concept. In the 29th Āhnika called 'Rahasyavidhiprakāśana', this concept has been discussed under Dautavidhi (i.e., practice relating to the female messenger). When parents unite identifying themselves with Śiva and Śakti giving birth to progeny, the latter who is the Siva-incarnate and instant repository of knowledge is designated as Yoginībhū—grace (Śaktipāta), Abhinava points out to the characteristics,[1] laid down in the Śrīpūrvasāstra, of an aspirant who is endowed with Madhyatīvraśaktipāta:

1. Unflinching faith in God;
2. Realization of Mantras;
3. Control over all the objective principles;
4. Successful conclusion of the activities undertaken;
5. Poetic creativity; and
6. Sudden or spontaneous knowledge of all the disciplines.

All these signs or a few of them show themselves in varying degrees according to the quantum of grace bestowed. But, Jayaratha, on the authority of his teachers, says all these signs were patently visible in the author of the Tantrāloka.[2] This is why such a man whose wisdom (Sattarka—right logic) dawns on its own is said to be initiated by one's own deified awareness and exercises universal jurisdiction.[3] It is, therefore, not difficult to understand as to why Abhinava assumes the role of an Ācārya (teacher) throughout his work.[4]

(b) Pupils, Colleagues and Family Circle

Two factors prompted Abhinavagupta to undertake the writing of the Tantrāloka. He was implored by his students and colleagues[1] and was ordained by his teacher Śambhunātha[2] to write a complete manual and bring out the aspects that the heretics were not able to see. Abhinavagupta in his concluding remarks even names his important pupils who were instrumental to his writing the Tantrāloka. Manoratha, who happened to be his brother[3], was foremost among them. However, before he could go ahead to favour Manoratha, other disciples including his cousins also approached him with a similar request.[4] Of these Karṇa—the son of Śauri, Mandra—Karṇa's boyhood friend and son of a minister, Kṣema, Utpala, Abhinava, Cakraka, Padmagupta—all cousins, and Rāmagupta are remembered by name. A few others also beseached Abhinava who accommodated all of them as it was against his training to turn down a request. We have already come across his brother Manoratha, Karṇa and Rāmadeva in the concluding verses of the Parātriṁśikāvivaraṇa[1] being described in extremely eloquent terms. His brother was a great devotee of Śiva and displayed command over all the disciplines. Karṇa, though quite young, had grasped the essence of Śaiva principles and was totally averse to mundane attractions. He is the same Karṇa who, together with Mandra, requested Abhinava time and again to write a commentary on the Mālinī-vijayottaratantra.[2] Karṇa had one son, Yogeśvaridatta by name, who displayed personal qualities justifying his name.[3] Karṇa's young wife Ambā[4] also grew detached from the worldly affairs and devoted herself exclusively to the worship of Śiva when her husband died later at an advanced age.[5] It is clear from Abhinava's remarks that although Karṇa's entreaty was a forceful factor behind Abhinava's undertaking, the former did not live long to see the work complete. Ambā, Karṇa's wife, was perhaps Abhinava's sister, elder or younger it is difficult to say. Because, on the strength of Abhinava's own statement, she looked upon Abhinava as her teacher and Siva personified although he happened to be her real brother and as such she was successful in keeping the filial emotions at bay.[1] And when it came to Abhinava, though a brother, he justified her trust, respect and faith in him as a teacher by his virtuous conduct where the joy of knowledge aggravated his lust for further knowledge,[2] but who also actively nurtured all the efforts annulling the sense of delimited existence from heart. This perhaps explains why Abhinava devotes so much space to the description of Karṇa and his family.

Next comes Rāmagupta who is referred to as Rāmadeva in the P.T.V. He was exclusively given to the study of Śaiva scriptures and having fully comprehended the nuances of Vidhi and Maṇḍala in Trika scriptures was rather impatient to serve his teacher, Siva as well as scriptures. From the P.T.V.

we learn that he had thoroughly mastered grammar, Mīmāṁsā and logic also.[1]

The list includes his five cousins including Kṣema and one his namesake. All these cousins showed in common their absolute devotion to Śiva and rejection of worldly possessions. We do not know if Kṣema amongst them was identical with Abhinava's illustrious disciple Kṣemarāja, the author of several erudite works. But all the circumstantial evidence tends to favour this identification. Although all these are mentioned as 'Pitṛvyatanayāḥ', Abhinava in his Tantrāloka does not indicate who his uncle (Pitṛvya) was. According to Pandey he mentions his uncle as Vāmanagupta in the Abhinavabhāratī.[2] From this quotation he appears to be a man of literature. While discussing Abhinava's teachers we shall revert to him. Since he is the only person alluded to as his uncle, it may not be illogical if Kṣema's father and Vāmanadatta are identified.

The only pupil we have yet to talk about is Mandra. He happens to be a boyhood friend of Karṇa and his cousin also, as is gathered from the fact that Vatsalikā, Sauri's wife, has been called his aunt (Pitṛvyavadhū).[3] The possession of all the necessary basic qualities makes his personality very pleasing and he was gifted with enormous riches and learning in equal measure. It was he who made Abhinava's stay at his suburban residence where all the members of household including children were dedicated to the divine worship.[1]

It was the combined request of all these pupils and his fellow-students[2] who were longing to learn the entire tantric literature that he could not desist from writing the Tantrāloka.[3] In fact it was his own deep rooted desire that was awaiting an excuse for an outlet just as a dancer, desiring to dance, cannot resist stepping when he gets an instrument for accompaniment. Not only the request from students, but also the advice of his teachers to this effect was found by him full of great benign possibilities.[4]

(c) Place of Composition

The Tantrāloka was, thus, written in the suburban residence of Mandra, where his aunt Vatsalikā[5] looked after Abhinava with so much care and concern that Abhinava found her name equal to her merits and felt constrained to attribute the success of his work to the all-caring presence of Vatsalikā.[6] His

(d) TIME

Out of the material covered so far, the portion relating to Karṇa and Śauri etc. is relevant from yet another point of view. Abhinava, though ever ready to provide sufficient biographical data about himself and his environ, does not throw any direct hint on his time in the Tantrāloka itself. Abhinava's time is no doubt fairly certain (he is placed around 950-1020 A.D.).[3] It is here that we get some clues on the matter. Śauri appears to be a senior contemporary of Abhinava because the latter has seen all the three generations of Śauri e.g.,—Śauri, Karṇa and Yogeśvaridatta. Abhinava in fact was the contemporary of Karṇa, his brother-in-law, husband of his sister Ambā. Abhinava also witnessed the death of Karṇa, his close relative and an ardent disciple. Karṇa died at fairly advanced age (Agrage Vayasi T.A. 37.77) when his son, Yogeśvaridatta, was already grown up. Cons-

Here the word 'bhrātā' does not stand logical scrutiny. We have therefore suggested the correction within brackets. Śauri was Vatsalikā's husband and not brother—is proved by collateral evidence.

truing the present data with those in the P.T.V.[1] we come to learn that Śauri was son of Vallabha who was a Brahmin and a senior minister or the prime minister of king Yaśaskara who definitely ruled in the year 939 A.D. Thus, Abhinava who belonged to the third[2] generation from king Yaśaskara should have undertaken the writing of the Tantrāloka at quite mature age; his accepted date (circa 950-1025 A.D.) continues to remain the same which may be shown in the following tabular form:

(e) Ancestors & parents

Abhinava has provided sufficient insight into his place of origin, ancestors and teachers. Apart from scattered references throughout the text of the Tantrāloka he has devoted sizable space in the first and the thirtyseventh Ahnikas. His earliest known ancestor Atrigupta was born in Madhyadeśa which falls in Kumārikā region (earth).[1] Construed with the material from the P.T.V. Madhyadeśa is found to be synonymous with Antarvedi[2] (i.e., land between Gaṅgā and Yamunā) which might be identified with modern Kannauj and was the centre of all learning. His surname was Gupta and his proper as well as Gotra names were Atri,[3] if we go by the explanation of Jayaratha. He was brought to Kashmir by king Lalitāditya-Muktāpīḍa of Karkoṭaka dynasty (725-761 A.D.) out of great love and respect possibly[4] when the latter conquered the king Yaśovarman of Kannauja (730-740 A.D.). Abhinava has paid glowing tributes to Kashmir, the land of learning, beauty and eternal bliss. Atrigupta was settled in Pravarapura, a decent beautiful town founded by an earlier king Pravarasena[5] (c. 5th-6th century) on the banks of Vitastā, modern Jhelum. We do not know if he is the same as the illustrious composer of the Setubandha, because Abhinava is silent on this aspect. A house was built on the bank of Jhelum by king Lalitāditya for his residence facing the temple of Śiva creating an environ of sanctity around the whole place. The temple, too, was located on the river bank and had a Siddhaliṅga enshrined in it.[1] The king also granted enough property and wealth for Atrigupta's maintenance.[2] After a sufficient gap of about 150 years in the lineage of the immigrant family of Atrigupta, Abhinava's grandfather Varāhagupta was born. He was an eminent scholar.[3] It appears all through the intervening generations, about which nothing is known, traditions of learning and devotion to Śiva continued unabated. Varāhagupta's son Narasiṁhagupta, also popularly known as Cukhalaka, was Abhinava's father. His intellect was sharp, mind pure as a result of his deep access into all the branches of learning and heart full of devout devotion to Śiva.[4]

On the authority of Jayaratha we know that the name of Abhinava's mother was Vimalā.[5] In fact Abhinava himself suggests it in the very first word (Vimalakalā) of the Tantrāloka[1]. His mother died when Abhinava was a child[2] and was brought up by his father. His father though young was in the least distracted by deviations natural to the young age and had developed acute devotion to Śiva as a result of complete aversion to the worldly attractions[3]. Mother's premature death brought a sea change in Abhinava's spiritual life and with the removal of the staunchest cause of attachment, he instantly attained salvation in his lifetime itself.[4] His father reared Abhinava not only physically, but intellectually also. We shall have occasion to dilate upon it later.

Now a brief pause. In this context Abhinava makes no mention of his brother and sister though we have already noted that Manoratha and Ambā were his brother and sister respectively. It is difficult to say among the three who was younger and who was elder. From Abhinava's account we know that his mother died in his childhood and he was tended by his young father; it is quite possible that Abhinava might be the youngest. The reason for our holding so lies in the fact that he was a Yoginībhū in whose birth parental union did not take place for the satisfaction of carnal instinct but as a matter of spiritual necessity. Abhinava's parents must have taken some time before they were able to develop such a frame of mind. Thus his brother and sister should have been born in the evolutionary phase. In any case the mutual gap between their birth must be small as the father was quite young when he turned away from worldly allurements and mother passed away quite early. Regarding Abhinava's own family, the Tantrāloka is not of much help. It is from the I.P.V.V. we learn that he was a celibate throughout his life and as such the question of having wife or son etc. did never arise.[1]

From the foregoing account the following picture of Abhinava and his family emerges :
(f) TEACHERS

Coming to his teachers we find Abhinava very informative. He received his first lessons from his father, Narasiṁhagupta alias Cukhalaka. Grammar, logic and literature were the three fields which he mastered under the guidance of his father,[1] but the lessons with his father were just the beginning of his extraordinary intellectual pursuit. It appears while he was enjoying his lessons in literature, he was overtaken by irresistible devotion to Śiva which made him serve numerous teachers at their own seats.[2] In pursuing his ever-increasing lust he did not even bother for the normal decorum and accepted serfdom of his teachers to acquire knowledge.

It appears Abhinava had to face tremendous criticism for going from one teacher to the other.[3] Although he is an ardent follower of the Śrīpūrvaśāstra, he quotes from the Mataśāstra twice[4] in the Tantrāloka to emphasize that as a black bee (Bhṛṅga) moves from flower to flower to collect scent, in the same way a student, desirous of knowledge, should visit from teacher to teacher. It is why he flocked at the gates of logicians, Mīmāṁsists, Buddhists, Ārhats and Vaiṣṇavas.[5] He also suggests the order in which he approached the teachers of respective disciplines. He first approached Vaiṣṇavas, then Buddhists, then Śiddhānta Śaivists, and finally Trika scholars.[1] It is a very terse proposition to identify all his teachers by name in different disciplines, yet we get a reasonably adequate account in this respect.

(i) MAṬHIKĀGURUS & (ii) JÑĀNAGURUS

Abhinava's teachers may be divided in two broad groups—(1) Maṭhikāgurus (teachers representing a preceptorial school and thereby a definite spiritual approach) and (2) Jñānagurus (teachers imparting knowledge in general in some specific area). In the opening verses of the first Āhnika he deals with the Maṭhikāgurus[2] (except Amardaka Maṭhikā) and towards close of the Tantrāloka (37th Āh.) he first discusses Maṭhikāgurus and then other teachers. Under Maṭhikāgurus he first refers to Bhūtirāja.[3] Bhūtirāja and his son, whose name Abhinava does not disclose, represent the Nātha Maṭhikā, representing dualist-cum-monist school.[4] Traiyamba Maṭhikā, which is related to Tantra-prakriyā, is represented by Lakṣmaṇagupta who steps into the shoes of Utpala and Somānanda, Abhinava's grand and great-grand teachers respectively.[5] Lakṣmaṇagupta is followed by

Śambhunātha, who represents the Fourth School[1], which also goes by the name of Ardha-traiyambaka and is supposed to be identical with Kula Prakriyā.[2] Śambhunātha appears to be the main inspiration behind the Tantrāloka. Although Abhinava has left out teachers of the Āmardaka school in the beginning, possibly because they fell outside the purview of Tantraprakriyā, he utilizes the first apportunity in the concluding verses to refer to Vāmanātha who was the son or pupil of Eraka and represented the dualist school founded by Amardaka or Ānanda.[3]

After discussing Maṭhikāgurus, he switches over to give out a long list of his main teachers[4] who perhaps taught him secular subjects. The list reads as under:

(i) Śrīcandra Śarmā, (ii) Bhava,[5] (iii) Bhaktivilāsa, (iv) Yogānanda, (v) Abhinanda, (vi) Śivaśakti,[6]

(vii) Vicitranātha, (viii) Dharmaśiva,[1] (ix) Vāmanaka, (x) Udbhaṭa, (xi) Śrībhūteśa[2] and (xii) Bhāskara.

All these teachers, whose favour was earned by Abhinava due to their service and attendance, conveyed whatever they knew in their branches to Abhinava helping him become self-contented and truly dedicated to exploring reality.[3] Since these are his principal teachers, there might have been some not-so-important teachers, about whom we hardly know anything. Abhinava, however, refers to his several teachers in the body of the text quite often, but use of the term 'Guru' or 'Guravaḥ' is so loose that it is difficult to take a definite stand. Sometimes it refers to a mythical figure,[4] sometimes to a preceptorial ancestor much anterior to him,[5] sometimes to the legendary Kṛṣṇa[6] and sometimes to the earlier commentators including even his opponents[7]. Moreover, it does not have an exact chronological connotation. However, on the basis of available evidence, a conjecture can be made. Abhinava studied the Mātaṅga Āgama with some Aniruddha[8] who also commented upon the Mataṅga Śāstra an Āgama of Siddhānta Śaivism. Jayaratha seems to have quoted a long extract from this commentary in his Viveka on the Tantrāloka 8.433-34.[1] In addition, Abhinava also furnishes some useful information about some of his teachers. Dharmaśiva, mentioned at serial No. (viii) above, seems to have imparted lessons on some of the matters connected with Parokṣa Dīkṣā (indirect initiation). His views are quoted in the context of judging the comparative strength of the rites (Saṁskāras)[2] which were slightly different from those enunciated by Sambhunātha. His method is then discussed from the T.A. 21.50 to 21.55. Abhinava has referred to two Vāmanas above with slight variation in name—one is Vāmanātha, his teacher in Śaiva dualism and other Vāmanaka about whom we perhaps know nothing. According to Pandey one of the Vāmanas (which one?) is identical with Abhinava's uncle Vāmanagupta[3] and has been mentioned in the list of his teachers. Possibly it is Vāmanaka which goes more in line with Vāmanagupta. But Abhinava nowhere refers to Vāmanaka as his uncle in the Tantrāloka nor does he give the slightest idea about the discipline taught. He, however, refers to one Vāmanadatta, who on the testimony of Jayaratha, was the author of one Saṁvitprakāśa.[1] This Vāmanadatta has definitely been referred to as 'Gurubhiḥ' and not by name. From the content and context it appears that this Vāmanadatta talked of variety in the instrumental knowledge without affecting the overall unity of divine consciousness. In all probability Vāmanaka is Vāmanadatta who was a teacher of Abhinava, but not his uncle.[2] Amongst the remaining Jñānagurus our informations about Bhāskara are in much better shape, though his name does not figure in the Tan- trāloka elsewhere.[1] From other sources we know that he was the renowned author of the Vārtika on the Śivasūtras, in addition to the Vivekāñjana and Kakṣyāstotra. His father was one Divākara and he was a disciple of Śrīkaṇṭha in Spanda branch and of the Stotrakāra Siddhinātha in Krama.[2] Some liberty may be taken for certain conjectures with regard to Bhava mentioned at Serial No. (ii) above. Abhinava has referred to a series of teachers coming in preceptorial succession who commented on the Parātriśikā Śāstra running as under—Somānanda, Kalyāṇa and Bhavabhūti.[3] If Abhinava's description depicts the chronological succession of teacher-commentators Bhavabhūti occupies exactly the same point of time (calculating from Somānanda) which is occupied by Bhava as teacher of Abhinavagupta. In that case 'Bhava' would be an abbreviated form of Bhavabhūti or should we be justified in reading in the text "Bhavabhūtivilāsayogānanda" in place of "Bhavabhaktivilāsayogānanda"? We leave it for future investigation.

In this group figures Udbhaṭa also, about whom Abhinava's commentator Jayaratha gives us some information. This Udbhaṭa is different from his earlier namesake, who was a poetician and a prominent figure in king Jayāpīḍa's court (779-813 A.D.). The latter Udbhaṭa followed Ujjaṭa in succession and happened to be the grand disciple of Bhānuka (850-900 A.D.), an early Krama teacher.[1] This tradition descended down to Jayaratha intact through intervening generations of teachers. However if both the accounts—Abhinava's as well as Jayaratha's—are construed together, it would appear that Abhinava was in possession of both the Krama traditions—one descending through Govindarāja→Somānanda→ Lakṣmaṇagupta and the other through Bhānuka→ Ujjaṭa→Udbhaṭa. Since Abhinava subscribed to the tradition headed by Somānanda, he is avowedly indebted to Lakṣmaṇagupta for his lessons in the whole of Tantra-prakriyā comprising Krama, Trika and Pratyabhijñā systems. Udbhaṭa comes in for a lone reference, because Abhinava, though, learnt Krama dicta from Udbhaṭa, his lessons were limited to the sphere of Udbhaṭa's branch of Krama alone and his heart did not lie there.

Coming to the Maṭhikāgurus our first encounter takes place with one Vāmanātha who taught tantras of the dualistic schools to Abhinava.[2] He has nowhere been remembered except once. From Abhinava's statement[3] we simply know that he was either son or pupil of Eraka,[4] who happened to be an excellent teacher. This Eraka, the teacher in dualism, is not to be confused with his earlier namesake who was a Stotrakāra and a Krama propagator (850-900 A.D.).[1] We are in dark about any further details.

Next come Bhūtirāja (900-950 A.D.) and his son as representative teachers of dualism-cum-nondualism[2] initiated by Srīnātha. It appears that Abhinava took his lessons from father and son both. As we have seen, Bhūtirāja is remembered in the beginning and his son towards the end of the Tantrāloka. The Tantrāloka is silent about his son. From other sources he may be identified with Helārāja, the illustrious commentator of the Vākyapadīya and brother of Indurāja, the latter being Abhinava's teacher in literary criticism.[3] Bhūtirāja has claimed highest veneration from Abhinava who views him as another form of the Godhead.[4] Bhūtirāja seems to have excelled in many branches of learning in addition to the dualistic-monistic discipline. Perhaps his full name was Bhūtirājamiśra. He seems to have initiated Abhinava in the science of the 'size of all the regions' (Bhuvanas)[5] and 'purifiability of all of them' and propounded the theory of hundred Rudras (Śatarudras)[6] in the context of the treatment of Bhuvanādhvan and Pratiṣṭhā Kalā. Another major item which Abhinava learnt from Bhūtirāja was Brahmavidyā which consisted of such Mantras which if read at the time of death would lead to instant self-realization.[1] He also imparted three esoteric disciplines pertaining to Praṇava, Māyā and Bindu to Abhinava[2] in the course of discussion on Mantravīrya. Several references in the Tantrāsāra to Bhūtirāja in the context of Krama system gave rise to a suspicion among later scholars that Krama was also one of the domains in which Abhinava was introduced by Bhūtirāja. According to Jayaratha there was no substance in such statements.[3] Jayaratha has also taken exception to his being a pupil of Cakrabhānu (1050-1100 A.D.), an important[4] Krama teacher. Bhūtirāja is one person about whom we have some more informations, most of them provided by Abhinava himself. But we refrain from them at the moment as we are concentrating on the material in the Tantrāloka[1] alone. Thus Bhūtirāja emerges as an extremely celebrated scholar who was father of two eminent scholars e.g., Indurāja and Helārāja and teacher of Abhinavagupta and Helārāja.

Next comes Lakṣmaṇagupta who commands very high veneration from Abhinava. He comes in the preceptorial lineage of Traiyambaka and is responsible for Abhinava's training in the entire monistic thought of Kashmir including Krama, Trika and Pratyabhijñā branches, excepting Kula. He directly inherited the traditional secrets from Traiyambaka through Somānanda and Utpala. Thus he was direct disciple of the last.[2] We have already marked Abhinava referring in very eloquent words to him.[3]

In addition to Trika, Krama and Pratyabhijñā which constitute Tantra-prakriyā, Abhinava refers to his other views also. From the T.A. 15.247 to 254 Abhinava discusses a special type of Nyāsa, which according to Jayaratha was advocated by Lakṣmaṇagupta[4] in the overall context of Samayidīkṣā. This was one of the six original Nyāsas employed to invoke and realize Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī. Lakṣmaṇagupta differed from Śambhunātha in respect of Śāktanyāsa.[5]

Similarly Jayaratha points out that Lakṣmaṇagupta held a different construction of the Mantras[1] as opposed to the 'ancients'. The Tantrāloka and Viveka both do not go beyond this point. From it it appears that Lakṣmaṇagupta must have certain work or works to his credit of which we know very little. It is only from another source, the I.P.V.V., that we know that he was the author of one Śrīśāstra[2] which, subject to further investigations, may be identified with Śāradātilakatantra.[3] It appears strange at the first sight that Abhinava neither refers nor quotes from the S.T. anywhere, perhaps due to the fact that the S.T. does not purport to be a work relating to the disciplines in which Abhinava was specifically groomed by Lakṣmaṇagupta. Future studies may investigate if the views appearing in the Tantrāloka or Jayaratha are traceable or not to the S T.

We have now arrived at the ultimate phase of our enquiry regarding his teachers. Śambhunātha, the prime force and motivation behind the Tantrāloka, was Abhinava's guide in Kula system or Ardha-Traiyambaka school, a school emanating from Traiyambaka through his daughter. Kula system was also known as Kula-prakriyā.[1] Among all his teachers Śambhunātha is held in highest regard. He is compared to the sun whose rays removed the darkness caused by ignorance from the heart of Abhinava.[2] He is again described as the sun in the vast firmament of the lineage of Traiyambaka.[3] He is further described as the moon for the ocean of the Trika systems.[4] Bhaṭṭanātha was his other title or name.[5] It was because of him and his consort that Abhinava shone with spiritual splendour consequent upon the total removal of his sense of duality. It was due to this special calibre, Abhinava could embark upon writing the Tantrāloka. The consort here is some Bhagavatī, as we know it from another verse.[6] In fact she was the spiritual messenger (Dūtī) and has been specially mentioned because under Kula Prakriyā knowledge is transmitted through her alone. In other words Abhinava was favoured by Śambhunātha through his Dūtī Bhagavatī.[7]

bhunātha→Abhinava.[1] Sometimes Abhinava speaks of Śambhunātha as the direct recipient of grace and knowledge from Sumati,[2] ignoring Somadeva. According to Jayaratha one should not get confused on such statements, because the 'teacher' here means the lineage teacher[3] or the word 'teacher' has to be understood to stand for teacher or grand-teacher, as the case may be. Jayaratha adds to our information by quoting from certain other source.[4] From it, it is clear that Śambhunātha hailed from some seat situated in south known as Jālandhara and was a competent authority in the system of five sources thriving on Atimārga. This is an important statement from the historical angle. As we know Krama has been called to have emanated from Northern seat.[5] As against this Jālandhara is described not as Southern Pīṭha but as being situated somewhere in south.

Geographically, present Jālandhara falls towards south of Kashmir. Could we therefore surmise that Śambhunātha belonged to modern Jālandhara and Abhinava walked down to him in pursuit of his studies, since former's fame had already spread far and wide from his spiritual seat itself. The other significant point that merits consideration is that he excelled in Atimārga, which was perhaps more akin to Tripurā system. This problem has occupied our attention elsewhere[1] and our information has remained static so far.

Śambhunātha's learning was not confined to Kula system alone. Jayaratha while explaining the T.A. 1.13[2] says that the choice of diction implies his having contributed to the disciplines like Trika etc.[3] In order to endorse his statement he quotes a verse from Abhinava suggesting that Abhinava's commentary on one of the Trika Śāstras, incorporated his learning from Śambhunātha who had mastered all the scriptures. However, as the verse could not be traced to any of Abhinava's published works, it is difficult to precisely pinpoint the system. It may, however, be observed in passing that Śambhunātha exercised considerable impact on Abhinava in respect of his two other texts e.g., P T.V.[1] and M.V.V.[2]. Since other sources are not our immediate concern we have to refrain from alluding to them unless it is absolutely necessary.

Abhinava has cited Śambhunātha as an authority on several occasions and on different issues.[3] Abhinava learnt Dhyāna (meditation), as the first among Āṇava Upāyas, from him.[4] The second Upāya, consisting of articulation of the state of vital airs (Prāṇavṛttisamuccāra) is also credited to the teachings of Śambhunātha.[5] This included variety of blisses from Nirānanda, to Jagadānanda. Under the same Āṇavopāya presentation[6] of the 'day-night division'(Ahorātravibhāga—the second ancillary topic under the Kālādhvan, i.e. passage of time) and his criticism of other inferior views[7] carries the imprints of Sambhunātha's teachings. In the overall context of passage of space (Deśādhvan)[1] Abhinava has openly acknowledged the debt of Śambhunātha in his treatment of the five stages of human experience such as wakefulness etc.,[2] being the third ancillary topic under the elaboration of the sub-categories (Tattvabheda). Similarly in the course of enunciating the second anciallary topic, i.e. the procedure of categories (Tattvavidhi), fifteen internal varieties of every category and the like have been discussed by Abhinavagupta only in the light of what Śambhunātha preached him by transmitting the entire tradition which the former secured from his teachers.[3] In the same context Abhinavagupta discusses the categories as symbolized by Prāṇic variety latent in the Khecarīcakra keeping within the instructions of Śambhunātha.[4] In the thirteenth Āhnika while dwelling upon the fifth ancillary topic i.e., variety of disappearance (Tirobhāvavaicitrya), Abhinavagupta invokes the criteria as laid down by Śambhunātha as to who ought to be preferred as a teacher between a Yogin and a Jñānin.[5] It is in this Āhnika that Abhinavagupta does not accept Bhedavādin's view regarding existence of gradation in the descent of grace on the strength of Śambhunātha's teachings.[1] Moving further we notice Abhinava discussing the varieties of 'general assignment' (Sāmānyanyāsa) as a third ancillary topic under Samayidīkṣā and ascribing it to his teacher.[2] In the same Āhnika Abhinavagupta expresses his indebtedness to him in the presentation of various types of 'special assignment' (Viśeṣanyāsa) and underscores the difference between the two lines adopted by Śambhunātha and Lakṣmaṇagupta, his two teachers, in respect of the Śripūrvaśāstra. Abhinavagupta reconciles the two positions saying that one should first practice sixfold Śāktā Nyāsas as advocated by Lakṣmaṇagupta and then switchover to sixfold Śaiva Nyāsas enjoined by Śambhunātha.[3] Samayīdīkṣā pertains to the daily functions (Nityakarma) of the aspirants. rites (Vahnikarma) constituted by Saṁskāras (Saṁskriyātattva) is the twentyfirst ancillary topic[1]—both these items have been reproduced by Abhinavagupta as he imbibed them from Sambhunātha. Another item of esoteric value was Jālayoga which was a major constituent of the indirect initiation (Parokṣa Dīkṣā).[2] In the context of the eighth ancillary topic under the occasional functions (Naimittika Vidhi) Abhinavagupta examines the phenomenon of death eliminating the fear thereof and while rejecting other views he swears by one propagated by Śaṁbhunātha. The whole of the twentyninth Āhnika is devoted to Kulayāga or the esoteric practices according to Kula-prakriyā, the specific area where Śambhunātha excelled. But even here certain items were propounded with greater emphasis on the authority of Śambhunātha[3]. For instance, the method of worship (Arcāvidhi, the third ancillary topic in the Āhnika) included the doctrine of ten aspects of Homa (offering oblation to fire) which emanated from Śambhunātha.[4] In the thirtyfifth Āhnika Abhinavagupta's attempt to strike a synthesis and project a harmonious construction of the different scriptures is again inspired by the teachings of Śambhunātha.[5]

From the foregoing account it is obvious that

Śambhunātha exercised tremendous influence not over Abhinavagupta's knowledge alone but also over his basic approach towards tantric wisdom and life. It is a matter of great misfortune that none of his works is extant today.[1] In certain circles he has also been equated with Siddhinātha, the author of the

1. However, Pandey assigns one Tantrasadbhāva to Śambhunātha on the basis of the T.A. 30.99[a]—

तुलामेलकयोगः श्रीतन्त्रसद्भावशासने ।

य उक्तः शम्भुनाथेन स मया दर्शितक्रमात् ॥ (Abhi., p. 583)

Dwivedi agrees with Pandey's views [NST (Upodghāta) p. 37 and also Upodghāta, p. 38]. This view is further strengthened when we find the same idea echoed in the T.A. 29.212—

शंभुनाथेनोपदिष्टां दृष्टां सद्भावशासने ।

According to Jayaratha this Sadbhāvasāsana is none other than the Tantrasadbhāva [सद्भावशासने इति श्रीतन्त्रसद्भावे T.A.V. VII, p. 3426. However the equation does not hold further. As we have already pointed out earlier, the use of 'Śambhunātha' is not definitive—sometimes it stands for the divine and sometimes for the teacher. Here and in most contexts it denotes the divine source. In the T.A. 20.12 Abhinavagupta ascribes the authorship of the Tantrasadbhāva to the Godhead—

यथा श्रीतन्त्रसद्भावे कथिता परमेशिना ।

श्रीपूर्वशास्त्रेऽप्येषा च सूचिता परमेशिना ॥

a. Abhinavagupta reiterates his views regarding the revelatory character of the text in the T.A. 30.59—

व्योमस्विति शिवेनोक्तं तन्त्रसद्भावशासने ।

Even in continuation with the T.A. 30.99, cited above, Abhinavagupta explicates his stand in the T.A. 30.101—

प्रकर्तव्या यथा दीक्षा श्रीसन्तत्यागमोदिता ।

कथ्यते हाटकेशानपातालाधिपचोदिता ॥

Then on the strength of Abhinavagupta's own statements the Tantrasadbhāva is a work of divine origin and Śambhunātha, his teacher, could not be its author. According to Dwivedi (Upodghāta, p. 38) the work is available in M.S. and the quotes from it in the T.A.V. are traceable to it.

Krama Stotra, but on a close scrutiny the view is difficult to maintain.[1]

Thus, the known part of the glittering galaxy of Abhinavagupta's teachers comes to a close. However, it does not wind up the list altogether, because several references[2] in the Tantrāloka to his teachers are either obscure or doubtful and thereby they strengthen the possibility of there being several other teachers. From the quotations it appears that Abhinavagupta, in addition to different disciplines, learnt different texts in the same discipline from different teachers, but at the present juncture our informations are severely handicapped. Moreover, his teachers in Buddhism, Vaiṣṇavism and Jainism etc. are not known to us. A few of them may be from the list furnished by Abhinavagupta and a few not-so-important might have escaped any mention at all. To recapitulate, the following chart may give a brief idea of his teachers and the subjects they taught on the basis of the material in the Tantrāloka:

(II) Works

From Abhinava's teachers we now turn to his works[1] confining our enquiry to the titles cited in the Tantrāloka alone. Interestingly the number of own works mentioned is not large. His first ever reference has been made to one Anuttaraprakriyā[2] which has been found identical with the Parātriṁśikāvivaraṇa by Jayaratha. It is to be noted that Abhinavagupta makes no mention of its authorship. He has referred to other Vivṛtis on the P.T. but they are all by his predecessors[3] and goes on citing views from one such Vivṛti in the T.A. 13.150-154. In view of Abhinavagupta's silence on the authorship are we justified in branding the Anuttaraprakriyā as his work? Perhaps yes, for (i) Jayaratha interprets Anuttaraprakriyā as Parātrīśikāvivaraṇa, which is exactly the title of Abhinavagupta's published work, (ii) Abhinavagupta has shunned detailed discussion on the inter se relationship amongst categories where each succeeding category represents the power and each preceding the powerful and commends his another work for a detailed understanding. The problem, inter alia, has been treated in detail in the P.T.V. by Abhinavagupta (pp. 99-218). Abhinavagupta's commendation, coming as it does in the Tantrāloka, assumes special significance because the Parātriṁsikā has been called the Trikasūtra elsewhere and has been shown to serve as an index to the entire subject matter of Trika System,[1] (iii) The word "Purogamāḥ" (i.e. pilots or precursors) clearly implies that he authored a commentary on the P.T. which was preceded by his teachers namely Somānanda, Kalyāṇa and Bhavabhūti. Profuse references to Somānanda and his univocal acknowledgement of debt to the former towards the end of his P.T.V.[2] leave no doubt about the fact that the reference to the Anuttaraprakriyā is to his own work.

The other work which has found mention is the Mālinislokavārtika where the nature of five sources starting with their origin from the transcendental base has been taken up for elaborate treatment. One, eager to learn, may refer to it because Abhinavagupta is not in the habit of unnecessary repetition.[3] This text is identical with the Mālinīvijayavārtika and is a versicular running commentary on the Mālinīvijayottara Tantra. This is none other than the famous Śripūrvaśāstra, the scriptural backbone of the Tantrāloka. Pandey has successfully visualized a chronological order[1] among all the three works under reference which is as follows—M.V.V., P.T.V. and T.A.—each coming in succession.

In this very context it is significant to note that Abhinavagupta makes an indirect reference to one of his works called Pañcikā. While commenting on the T.A. 23.75[2] Jayaratha yields sufficient information.[3] It was a commentary which bore the title Pañcikā and was composed in versicular form as a quotation from it suggests. One thing is absolutely sure that the treatise was available to Jayaratha. Here again Abhinavagupta's reticence on its authorship is intriguing. It is Jayaratha who in another context refers to the Pañcikā as Abhinavagupta's composition.[4] The relevant reference does not give an idea of the original text as to whose commentary it was. Banking on the contextual evidence (Abhinavagupta is discussing removal of inferior knowledge from an aspirant belonging to the lesser disciplines as propounded in the Śrīpūrvaśāstra)[1] it, in all probability, should have been an exposition of the Śrīpūrvaśāstra. If it be so, the work would be identical with one Pūrvapañcikā included by Pandey among the works of Abhinavagupta.[2] The contention gets support if we coordinate the statement of Jayaratha on the T.A. 16.135-36 where Abhinavagupta dwells on the 'assignment of the passage of a syllable' (Padādhvanyāsa) in the context of 'variety of the purifiables' (Śodhyavaicitrya) under Putrakadīkṣā (initiation concerning aspirant of Putraka class) with the one in the P.T.V.[3] The work, as held by Pandey, might be an extremely large work if one remembers that the M.V.V. was a running commentary on the first verse of the M.V.T.[4], of course briefly incorporating the total subject matter of all the 18 chapters. Since the P.T.V. alludes to this text, the chronological sequence of the four works would emerge somewhat like this—Mālinīvijayavārtika, Pūrvapañcikā, Pratyabhijñā Vimarśinī and Tantrāloka. It will be proper to conclude that all these works constituted a complete whole on the Tāntrika material in a cognate field. It is significant to note that the Mālinīvijayavārtika was written in the same house[5] in which the Tantrāloka was undertaken.[1] It aimed at pleasing Śambhunātha[2] and was undertaken at the instance of Karṇa and Mandra.[3] Similar was the case with the P.T.V. at the time of whose writing, like the Tantrāloka, Abhinavagupta was under the care of Vatsalikā[4] and which was written at the request of Karṇa among others.[5] The benedictory verse is common to all the three works. The ideas that have been dealt with in one text are skipped over or just referred to in other works. It is an irony of fate that the Pūrvapañcikā or Pañcikā is perhaps lost to us.

Only one more work that is available from references is the Prakīrṇakavivaraṇa. Although the work is not cited by name in the Tantrāloka—it is alluded to as 'elsewhere' (Anyatra),[6] Jayaratha interprets the word 'Anyatra' as Prakīrṇakavivaraṇa. According to Abhinavagupta the causative operation (Prayojaka-vyāpāra) indicated in Sanskrit by the suffix Ṇic loses its primary meaning if it is related to the insentient prompter. The problem is: what is that constitutes the proper object of causative operation—one about which the relative action has already commenced or is yet to commence? Abhinavagupta says he has dealt with the issue in detail elsewhere, hence the reader should better not concentrate on this point here. In the Tantrāloka and for that matter in whole of the Abhi-navan writings there is absolute lack of any other reference to this work. Whether the work is identical with or different from his own Prakaraṇavivaraṇa has been discussed elsewhere.[1] It is, however, difficult to surmise about the precise nature of its contents. However, the word 'Prakīrṇaka' stands for 'miscellaneous'. Hence Abhinavagupta appears to have focussed on several relevant miscellaneous issues which were not primarily philosophical but, all the same, carried philosophical 'implications'. Such a hypothesis appears harmonious with the admission of Abhinavagupta that philosophical implications of grammatical issues (e.g., whether an inanimate entity can be endowed with causative action) received detailed consideration in this work.

Abhinava's most works are interspersed with the sprinklings of Stotras. In the Tantrāloka, too, we find Abhinavagupta referring to his Stotras at least twice.[2] In the 26th Āhnika Abhinavagupta quotes one Āryā and two Śārdūlavikrīḍitas as the T.A. 26.63-65.[3] One verse is quoted again as the T.A. 29.76. But the striking point about this Stotra is that it has not been quoted or cited, it has rather been assimilated into the text and made part of it. Since Abhinavagupta employs the word Stotra in plural

(i.e., Stotreṣu) he seems to imply that he has been giving vent to his ideas through Stotras as and when occasion warrants so. In the Tantrāloka we quite often come across with such verses which are replete with intense devotion.[1] But in the absence of any definite statement to this effect we assign the sorting out of such portions to the future ventures.

Before closing the discussion on Abhinavagupta's writings let us examine an intriguing statement from him. He says that one of the secondary items namely Naimittika (occasional functions) with its varieties has been dealt with in the Tantrasāra.[2] The Tantrasarā which is another work by the same pen, resounds the statement.[3] Now the problem is that the Tantrasāra, as we know, is a shorter version of the Tantrāloka on the admission of Abhinavagupta himself.[4] In all probability the Tantrāloka must precede the Tantrasāra; how could the Tantrāloka, therefore, contain a reference to the Tantrasāra? One thing is certain that the Tantrasāra is posterior in chronological order—it was a summary in simple words intended to enlighten all and sundry.

In all likelihood it seems to be a reference to some other work of the same name. Luckily Abhinavagupta in his P.T.V. refers twice to this work and quotes therefrom.[1] In the same work he further quotes twice from some Trikatantrasāra[2]. It appears that both of these texts were identical and were, perhaps, a scriptural work, on the Trīśikā offshoot of Kaulika discipline. According to Dwivedi[3] this work is also known variously as the Saḍardhaśāstra, Saḍardhasāra,[4] Saḍardhahṛdaya, Sāraśāsana and Sāraśāstra etc. However, the evidence is too sketchy to hazard a definite opinion. We are, however, inclined to think that while the Tantrasāra and the Trikatantrasāra formed one unit, Ṣaḍardhaśāstra etc. represented a separate unit standing perhaps for the P.T. which is reckoned as the Trikasūtra and Saḍardhahṛdaya[5] by the Tantrāloka itself. Sometimes these very names have been used to refer to the Tantrāloka also.[1] In the absence of conclusive denotation, it will be better to leave the things as they are at the moment.

If we shift from the Tantrāloka to the material in Jayaratha we are likely to conclude that Abhinavagupta undertook one more book called the Anupratyabhijñā.[2] On a closer scrutiny the view cannot be conclusively maintained, because much will depend on how we construe the phrase "Anenaiva"[3] i.e., as qualifying 'Anupratyabhijñākṛtā or 'Abhiprāyeṇa'. In view of the obvious contextual emphasis sought to be laid down by Jayaratha, construing Anenaiva with Abhiprāyeṇa seems more logical. On such a view Anupratyabhijñā will not tend to be Abhinavagupta's but rather someone else's work. Our other informations about this work and its author are practically nil.

(III) Methodology

The undertaking of the Tantrāloka was a very ambitious, massive and intricate project for Abhinava. Covering the vast panorama of the anarchous tantric literature of varying hues was no mean task. It appears that Abhinava evolved certain guiding principles, criteria and methods to handle the material in hand in such a manner as to weave a well-knit and coherent pattern. It is really amazing to see a subtle unity of purpose and presentation permeating the whole of the Tantrāloka without affecting the diversity of content and treatment.

(a) GUIDING PRINCIPLES OF EXPLANATION

Of all the characteristics of the Tantrāloka, the two are the most prominent—it is a comprehensive compendium and a glossorial treatise. Fused together they put the Tantrāloka in proper focus—it is a masterly compendium written in a glossorial style. As is quite usual with Abhinava, he does not keep us in suspense about his guiding principles. He devotes 10th and 11th ancillary topics—methods of explanation and listening respectively—under Naimittika Vidhi (28th Āhnika) and spells out the following imperatives of explanation relying upon the authority of the Devyāyāmala Tantra[1]—

Jayaratha adds— "यागत्रयात्मकपौर्णमासाङ्गप्रयाजानुयाजवदेकमनेकसाधारणं तन्त्रम् । अवघातादेरिव यावद्द्रव्यमसकृत्प्रयुक्तिरावर्तनम् । चमसगोदोहनादिवदसक्तप्रतिषेधो बाधः । पशुपुरोडाशवत् परमध्यपातिनो निजतन्त्रनैरपेक्ष्येण

(i) Sentences must be interpreted keeping in view the total textual perspective and their consistent construction must take into account the aphorism, phrase, sentence, chapter and section of the text, etc.

(ii) For lucid perspectival interpretation selective handling of the material or its over-all viewing may be resorted to as demanded by the occasion.

(iii) The item under reference is to be distinguished from other objects by resorting to various methods defined by common application (Tantra), exclusive application (Āvartana), negation (Bādha), contextual or incidental discussion (Prasaṅga) and exploration of the potential options (Tarka) as well as transference of one attribute to another (Atideśa).

(iv) Each utterance must be vigorously subjected to scrutiny and the opposite view, though to be denounced later, ought to be fortified with stronger arguments.

(v) The substantiation of the relative issue by demolishing the strongly conceived prima facie defence leads to quicker grasp free from suspicions and contrary ideas.

It may, however, be noted in passing that the T.S. substitutes Prasaṅga and Tarka with Samuccaya (conjunction or aggregation) and Vikalpa (option). Abhinava does not explain these words. M.R. Shastri in his editorial footnote (p. 189) adds—अनेकक्रियाकारकसंबंधः समुच्चयः, शब्दज्ञानानुपाती वस्तुशून्यो विकल्पः ।" Collective presentation of similar instances and statement of an optional instance, however, seem to be better explanations.

(vi) Linguistic variants (Bhāṣā), classical and conventional rules (Nyāya), close grasp of the pros and cons leading to conclusive appreciation of a theme (Vāda), regular homework at the theme (Laya), particular manner of textual interpretation (Krama)—these are the several alternatives out of which a teacher is supposed to employ one he finds most conducive and convenient for enlightening his student.

As an addendum another remark from Abhinava in some other text[1]—we are committed to confine ourselves to the pages of the Tantrāloka alone—may appear beneficial to refer to. The author of a scholastic treatise, according to him, has a multi-directional going—something he has to condense, something to enlarge, something he has to insert and something to skip. It is only then that he becomes a Śāstrakāra and is able to communicate adequately.

(b) Multi-tier handling of the source material

It is interesting to see how Abhinava employs all these—and many more norms—in his Tantrāloka. Quite in line with his extensive treatment his method has several tiers and we now propose to take an account of them. One, however, must be cautious that Abhinava has an extremely complex style serving various ends at a time, hence certain amount of overlapping will be unavoidable. The Tantrāloka being a digest of the Tantras the first thing that arrests our attention is his mathodical handling of the source material. In this area again his role is manifold. He has to identify the sources, make his pick, scrutinize it and then edit the same before it is reduced to writing. As we shall see later in detail he first sorts out the source material under three heads—(1) basic, (2) general and (3) specific. For instance, the M.V.T. is the basic source, the SV.T. and Sp.K. are the general sources and the remaining are the specific sources pertaining to the specific items. In culling material from them his first criterion is utility (upayoga)[1]. Even if a thing has been discussed at length in the original sources, Abhinava would avoid touching upon it if it does not serve the purpose in hand. The notion of utility includes that of relevance as well. Abhinava, though, categorically dispels doubts regarding his capacity for an elaborate treatment, he would scrupulously restrict himself to the relevant material[2] and move ahead. Abhinava's third criterion is to conform to the factual position. Even though a specific treatment may sometimes look at variance with his known stand, he would not feel shy of recording the same.[3] His fourth guiding principle behind a specific selection is its consistency with the general theme. Sometimes a text (the M.V.T. in this case) that may be wholly relevant as being advocate of a consistent theory is quoted at random only to highlight its uniform approach.[1] His choice is quite deliberate being invariably guided by the twin canons of consistency and relevance and in so doing he would not desist from rearranging the whole thing.[2] This will perhaps explain the two conflicting approaches in the 16th and 19th Āhnikas. It is the demand of relevance that they, though opposed to one another, fit in the two different chapters dealing with the 'assignment of purifying Mantras' in respect of the 'purifiable categories' and the 'assignment of words' in respect of the 'instant passing away' respectively.[3] His unflinching faith in relevance and utility is further exemplified by his handling of Dhyāna (meditation) —a sub-upāya under Āṇava. Āṇava-upāya in a sense is a series of sub-upāyas where, as per agamic order, Uccāra comes first followed by Karaṇa, Dhyāna and Varṇa respectively. Abhinava here interferes with the agamic sequence and places Dhyāna in the beginning to be followed by Uccāra, Karaṇa and Varṇa in that succession owing to their respective superior efficacy.[4]

One of the reasons for selective treatment lies in the difficulty in understanding the original source. He prefers dealing with the incomprehensible material omitting the easier one.[1] But that does not mean he would compromise authenticity for convenience. He would not commit an agamic source, even when he is sure of its stand, to a particular thesis, if the same has not been unequivocally propounded.[2] Thus while authenticity guides enumeration, easy comprehension guides omission. According to Jayaratha one of the criteria that guided the selective treatment was practicability and general applicability. It is possible he might have propounded different views of different people in some other writings, but it is impossible and impractical to take cognizance of all the views at one place.[3] Notwithstanding adherence to these norms occasionally, though sparsely, there appears to be an element of casualness in Abhinava's treatment. At such places Abhinava does not go deep, but restricts himself to the surface material. For example, Ananta, the presiding deity of the earthy regions (regions finding berth in the category called earth), is depicted as seated on a boat 'within' waters.[1] Now the word 'within' (Antāḥ) is either interpreted as 'residing above' (i.e., outside) or as 'gradual presence' (of 100 Rudras beginning with Ananta) but in no case as 'inside'. Why did Abhinava, instead, not choose a clearer expression to avoid likely confusion? Jayaratha suggests that as Abhinava's main preoccupation was to produce a compendium he made a cursory choice of the material as it appeared on the face of it, if it did not affect his logical position. This type of choice has been designated as 'expanded' or 'shallow'[2] (Uttāna) and Abhinava takes recourse to it several times. Reasons of space and fear of unwieldy size of the text also placed certain constraints on Abhinava in the final selection of his material.[3] But such a situation is consequent upon one of the three courses adopted by Abhinava—(1) He has already dealt with the similar material from other sources and candidly admits existence of the additional connected material which he has not deliberately used. In this context he occasionally advises the reader to refer to the original text itself;[1] (2) Sometimes he implies that his treatment is strictly confined to the basic sources and further reference to other sources will add only unnecessary bulk to the work;[2] (3) A thing may be relevant and contextually justifiable to refer to, but it leads to innumerable varieties depending upon the individual preferences. For example, in the M.V.T. (Śrīpūrvaśāstra) elemental submergence (Bhautāveśa) finds place after fifty varieties of Rudraśakti-samāveśa, but Abhinava though admitting its relevance and utility chooses to skip it.[3] But he continues to have an open mind. As and when he finds his 'basic' sources less vocal, he does not shirk laying his hands on other cognate sources.[4]

(c) Interpretation and its norms

Likewise Abhinava has tried to fashion a model for interpreting the source material. In all his writing Abhinava's obsession with three aims is obvious. They are (1) authenticity (2) unambiguity and (3) communicability. First of all, therefore, he tries to find out the meaning of the word employed, then grapples with the sentence[1] and then discovers its implication[2] and if the same still lacks in clarity, he picks up a suitable illustration.[3] While looking for denotation of a word he tries to fix up a modality for interpretation—whether it is to be explained literally,[4] etymologically or by implication. Sometimes even if some scriptural authority on an etymology or linguistic construction is not readily available, Abhinava would like one to exercise one's common sense, as it is not always possible to lay down everything in a book.[5] He always calls upon the intelligent reader to make his own guesses and draw inferences from a logical construction of the source texts, even if there is no explicit averment.[6] Abhinava is very methodical and meticulous. In interpreting a text he first decides upon the reading and critically edits it, if there are more readings than one or if there is confusion or difference of opinion.[1] He further examines the various interpretations already offered and finally puts his stamp on one. In agamic circles there was a dispute as to whether Avyakta springs from Māyā or Kalā. While the Rauravasaṁgraha of Bṛhaspati subscribed to the former premise, the Srīpūrvaśāstra swore by the latter. Abhinava sides with the Rauravasaṁgraha and declares all other alternative views as inconsistent and misleading.[2] In fact he seems to have an air of finality about his interpretation. In the process of interpretation he sometimes replaces the original agamic phrase thereby eliminating confusion and according proper meaning to both at the same time.[3] He then identifies the difficult portions. Sometimes it is a word[4] and sometimes it is a sizable part of the text. In the latter case he will leave out the easy portion and take up the difficult one. This offers one of the reasons why Abhinava calls his Tantrāloka as the Vārtika. In this connection a reference may be made to the Tantrāloka 8.171-178 where Abhinava devotes full eight verses to the explanation of the 1st of the two verses quoted by him earlier (T.A. 8.169-170) from the Raurava Vṛtti varbatim, as he felt it might be difficult to comprehend[1] otherwise. Since he does not want to leave anything at the mercy of an unintelligent reader, he once even cites a long portion (T.A. 13.164-195) from the Nandiśikhātantra word by word so that even an ordinary reader may be able to grasp the proper import.[2] He then, for a proper interpretation, sets upon both the stages of textual investigation—internal as well as external. In the first instance he analyses the whole text and arranges the entire subject-matter in a logical order and in the second he contrasts and compares the basic sources with the cognate sources and also the cognate sources with the basic ones so as to get a clearer and more detailed picture of the issues at hand. For example, in the 13th[3] and 15th[4] Āhnikas

Abhinava makes a first hand, direct analysis of the contents of the Śrīpūrvaśāstra and while reconciling the whole text, he even pin-points the textual portions that supposedly have bearing on the relevant theses (here 'descent of grace' and 'initiation' respectively) being propounded. The second phase (i.e., external) of his enquiry is seen where he abides by the authority of the Nandīśikhātantra[1] or Svacchandatantra when he finds it more comprehensive but quite in tune with his basic scripture the M.V.T.[2] The moment he notices variation, he strikes a note of caution and amends his treatment accordingly. In pursuance to this he discusses five gross elements (constituting physiological fetters) not after threefold egoity, as is done in the Svacchandatantra, but as constituting sixteen modifications of Prakṛti.[3] first thing that appeals even to a casual reader is awareness of this mission that is reflected in his style. He conceives the Tantrāloka as an organic whole and every section is so interwoven in order to serve a continuing integrated purpose that it is difficult to view one section in complete isolation from the other. He adopts twofold strategy to achieve this objective—one, notwithstanding his commitment to contextual relevance Abhinava does not consolidate his treatment of a particular issue at one place, instead he spreads it over several places catering for the demand of related issues;[1] two, he lets one chapter slide into the next and thereby maintains the structural unity. The second strategy is called Sañcaya Nyāya (i.e., analogy of an aggregate or accumulation) by Jayaratha,[2] where the first half of the concluding verse in every chapter marks the end of the current chapter

1. For example, Karaṇas (Karaṇa means 'intelligent practice' —करणं सप्तधा प्राहुरभ्यासं बोधपूर्वकम्— T.A. 5.129) which ought to have been exhausted under Āṇava-upāya (5th Āhnika) are discussed in at least five different chapters namely 11th, 15th, 16th, 29th and 32nd. Similarly, one of the ancillary issues called Paratattvāṇtaḥpravesalakṣaṇāni was a proper topic under Kulopāya (3rd and 29th Āhnikas) but which has been considered under Āṇava-upāya. Abhinava and Jayaratha, who closely follows him, no doubt have their justifications but they only strengthen our contention that the Tantrāloka has to be looked into as a 'whole'. See Jayaratha—

while the second half the beginning of the next chapter. He breaks this rule only once at the end of the 36th chapter where he uses one single half to denote conclusion and commencement both.[1] The third connected strategy aims at complete fusion of the quoted agamic text in the body of the Tantrāloka. But for Jayaratha we would never know what is the precise source material and what is Abhinava's treatment of it. Quite often we know it from Jayaratha's obvious comments and sometimes by contrasting it against the excerpts cited from the original by Jayaratha. For the sake of clarity we cite just one example in the footnote below.[2]

This fusion of original, however, with his own treatment is Abhinava's peculiar tool which he has used with master precision and canny skill to serve diverse ends and is not so simple a mechanism as it sounds at the first instance. As we have already seen, Abhinava (i) sometimes simply refers to the text[3], (ii) sometimes reproduces agamic authority[4] verbatim, (iii) sometimes elects to present a gist in his words[1] and (iv) sometimes partly quotes and partly summarizes.[2] Each one of these alternatives is purpose-oriented. In quoting directly he is guided by his desire to remove confusion.[3] When he employs his own language, it is either in order to summarize[4] or to introduce next topic[5]/matter/text after incorporating relevant material from the authority concerned. Sometimes, while retaining the original Āgama intact, Abhinava reverses the order of subject and predicate and thereby tries by implication to uphold his stand as he has done in the case of the Mataṅga Āgama.[6] In modifying the quoted authority sometimes certain altogether different considerations have weighed. For instance, he alters the text of the Śrīpūrvaśāstra from 'Na dvaitam nāpi cādvaitam' to 'Na dvaitaṁ nāpi cādvyayam' (T.A. 4.106) just for metrical propriety.[1] Likewise, Abhinava's omissions or extremely brief treatments are equally pregnant with suggestion. He omits an item or deals in brief with it if he finds its meaning obvious.[2] Specific items are omitted to enlarge the scope or application of the relative subject matter. Abhinava, for example, presents the Śivatanuśāstra as propounding the contents of the Śrīpūrvaśāstra itself though with a difference in style. In this treatment among the five sheaths (Kañcukas—revealing agents of limited individuality), 'time' and 'determination' (Kāla and Niyati) have been purposely dropped so as to clear the path for purification of categories, through three sheaths[3] Kalā etc. Omission is also resorted to avoid unnecessary repetition or analytical arrangement. Abhinava defines Pūjā (worship) and though he thinks that Homa (rite of oblation to fire) is duly covered by his definition of worship, he does not say so because Homa, as an ingredient of worship, has already been discussed and is likely to be discussed in future.[4] Abhinava is wary of discussing Mala (i.e., dirt = ignorance) in the 13th chapter again, because he has already done so in the 9th chapter.[1] Abhinava, does not mind repeating if it really advances the argument, but he would just keep away from a superfluous repetition. This is the reason why he does not take up virility of Mantra (Mantravīrya) in the 30th Chapter which is the appropriate topic after Mantra and Vidyā.[2] Apart from repetition, the fear of unnecessary analytical arrangement or elaboration (Vyāsa) is also an inhibiting factor. Since in the Traiśiras Āgama cycles of power consisting of varying number of spokes (powers)—from one to thousand—have already been elaborated Abhinava prefers not to make a reference to them for fear of fruitless compilation and irrelevance.[3]

In fact, Abhinava equips us fully to have insight into his unique style. He has three regular practices (i) brief (ii) detailed and (iii) mixed and calls the first two as Saṁkṣepa or Samāsa, Vistāra or Vyāsa or Vikāsa respectively. Abhinava has been very informative about the style he adopts in a particular setting. He discusses the concept of Ṣaḍadhva (six ways) as part of Sthānaprakalpa under Āṇava Upāya in great detail and affirms this fact.[4] Yet at an other place he tells us that he is going to follow the brief method in dealing with the problem of 'regional enumeration' (Purasaṁgraha) after treating the regional measurement (Bhuvanamāna) and scheme of categories (Tattva Yojana) at length.[1] In fact he forewarns us in the very beginning of the eighth Āhnika that he proposes to make use of brief and detailed styles[2] both intending thereby to use combined or mixed style in describing Deśādhva. While employing brief style Abhinava may go even extremely brief and present the abbreviated subject matter in a couple of Kārikās after handling it at length. He does so in respect of his treatment of three sub-passages—i.e., Pada, Mantra and Varṇa—of the principal cosmic way called Śabda (word).[3] Towards elaborate delineations, on the other hand, he normally adopts a three-tier strategy. He first puts forward the other available views, examines them and then enunciates his own stand. While embarking upon a comprehensive treatment of descent of grace in[4] the thirteenth Āhnika he initially introduces opposite views, Sāṁkhya being the main among them, from Kārikās 3 to 36, subjects them to critical scrutiny from Kārikās

37 to 101 and then dwells on his own thesis from Kārikā 102 onwards. In so doing, Abhinava is always seized of the related auxiliary matters as well. His frequent reversal to the 'original' or the 'subject in hand' may be understood only in this light.[1] In the context of Śivahastavidhi, a part of Samayidīkṣā, he starts discussing about various types of initiates such as Putraka, Ācārya and Daiśika finding them contextually relevant and reverts to Śivahastavidhi, the original item. Similarly as a part of his over-all organisational scheme the discussion on subordinate or particular issues (Anujoddeśa) follows that on principal or general issue (Pūrvaja Uddeśa). As we shall be seeing in detail subsequently he misses no opportunity to furnish proper background of the proposed subordinate topic. For instance, in the 15th Āhnika, assigned to Samayī initiation, Abhinava before discussing the first ancillary issue i.e., types of consecration or bath (Snānabheda), dwells on the necessary background.[2] The third phase of his style, which we have called as mixed, sometimes has a strange feature about it, that is, the detail refers to content while the condensation to body of the text, as for instance in Samayidīkṣā.[3] It means that Vistara and Saṅkṣepa have varied applications sometimes to the physical body of the text and sometimes to its contents.

(e) Purpose-oriented Diction

Abhinava's multi-ended style is ably supported by the choice of diction. Since Abhinava is creating a Śāstra his vocabulary and its use has to be very precise and meaningful. His usage of the word 'Atha'[1] according to Jayaratha suggests his intention to treat the following treatment as an explanation of his own statement.[2] In this sense the Tantrāloka sometimes emerges as an auto-commentary. Sometimes 'Atha' indicates a fresh start.[3] Similarly the use of 'Samyak'[4] (adequately) implies a clearcut difference from the basic dualist texts like Bhogakārikā and Mokṣakārikā of Sadyojyoti.[5] In a continuing discussion specific repetition is aimed at clarifying the issues. For instance, the lunar eclipse takes place in a conjunction of Full Moon and New Moon and not in a pure New Moon[6]—the re-use of the word 'Pūrva' is just meant for this.

(f) Presenting the Esoteric Matter

The language and style both undergo a change when it comes to deal with the exclusively esoteric matter. As we have seen earlier, the first characteristic of his style of not divulging entire subject matter at one place at a time is found to be more pronounced in such matters—he reveals partly, he conceals partly. This is exactly what he has echoed in the Tantrasāra.[1] The esoteric matters, which are totally related to one's personal experience, must be transmitted orally by the teacher alone—it is the exclusive domain of the teacher and the taught—, yet he delves into it only to preserve the agamic secrets for posterity and in so doing he disperses its discussion over several chapters[2] as has been done in the case of Karaṇas.

In addition to the dispersal of subject matter Abhinava abjures the use of direct language. It has to be subtle.[3] There are four pedestals of a system or scripture specially in the Ādi Yāga—Vidyā, Mantra, Mudrā and Maṇḍala. After covering Mantra and Mudrā he initiates discussion on Vidyā and implies that the topic of Maṇḍala is included in that of Vidyā and needs no open description.[4] As an outcome of the same attitude Abhinava has a guarded style to suggest the precise Mantras etc. to be used in esoteric performances. This aspect is adequately illustrated in prescription of the Mantra 'Nairṭi bhoḥ'.[5] Although there is no set rule, the quantum of disclosure depends upon the previously discussed norm of utility.[1]

So far we concentrated on Abhinavagupta and tried to analyse the material offered by the Tantrāloka covering his biodata, his objectives and circumstances behind writing the Tantrāloka, the methodology adopted by him and the principles governing his approach and his basic aim. This part of the Introduction therefore should serve as a backdrop setting. From here we propose to study his illustrious commentator Jayaratha on more or less similar lines before reverting to our observations on the text.

Only Jayaratha knows how to unravel the mystery—

CHAPTER THREE

(JAYARATHA)

The illustrious author of the Viveka commentary, Jayaratha, is next to Abhinavagupta alone in importance. He is no ordinary commentator. He religiously follows the methodology adopted by his master and creates a sort of complete independent text which not only expatiates upon the Tantrāloka but also supplements, complements and defends as it were. But for the Viveka we would never understand the Tantrāloka. An attempt will be made to evaluate and appreciate Jayaratha's contribution in the pages that follow.

Following our usual practice that we adopted in the case of Abhinavagupta, we are supposed to begin with the biodata of Jayaratha on the basis of the material available in the pages of the Viveka. But since in our Krama Tantricism, Vol. I (pp. 209-215) most of these data have already been used it will be better for the reader to refer to those pages. Here we will recapitulate only certain salient features to give a bird's eye view incorporating additional information, if any.

(I) Biographical Data

(a) ANCESTRAL AND PRECEPTORIAL LINEAGE AND RICH PARENTAL HERITAGE

Jayaratha provides graphic details about his parental and preceptorial geneologies, emanating from the vicinity of Abhinava's period itself. He represented the tenth generation from his earliest mentioned ancestor Pūrnamanoratha who was a court minister of King Yaśaskara (939 AD).[1] He was the grandson of one Sṛṅgāraratha who was also a minister of king Rājarāja[2] whose identity is not yet finally established but who is generally identified with King Jayasiṁha (1127-1155 A.D.). This Sṛṅgāraratha, whose father Guṅgaratha died prematurely at young age,[3] was different from one Sṛṅgāra who was the son of Dāśī Rājānaka and was the grand teacher of Jayaratha in statecraft.[4] Jayaratha throws some subtle hints about his ancestry and his age-long connection with Abhinava. 'Ratha' was perhaps the family title or surname as all the members of his ancestral lineage carried this appendage with them and so was the subtitle 'Datta' which embellished all the members of his preceptorial clan. Pūrṇamanoratha, the first known ancestor of Jayaratha, was a colleague of Vallabha in king Yaśaskara's court, whose son Śauri was Abhinava's senior contemporary and whose grandson Karṇa was married to Abhinava's sister. Thus, there was a close nexus between Abhinava and the earlier ancestors of Jayaratha in addition to the academic and spiritual ties that knitted them together. Another thing that Jayaratha wants to drive home is that all the generations preceding him enjoyed virtuous conduct,[1] power,[2] plenty of worldly riches,[3] fame,[4] learning[5] and devotion to Siva[6] and thus created the proper psychological environment that Jayaratha inherited from his forefathers. Similarly the entire series of his preceptorial lineage was characterised by spiritual prowess,[7] Sādhanā,[8] systematic scholarship[9] and virtuousness[10] and thereby offered rich intellectual heritage.

Jayaratha provides an insight into some of the important episodes connected with his family. Amṛtaratha and Utpalaratha II, the two ancestors sixth from Jayaratha, established two seminaries as a means of support to virtuous Brahmins in a place where a school or a metal workshop existed.[1] Utpalaratha II was appointed as a minister by king Ananta (1028-1063 A.D.) whose writ ran upto Trigarta (modern Jalandhar in the north-west) and who brutally crushed the forces of the King of Darads.[2] It was he (Utpalaratha II) who received lessons from his maternal uncle Vibhūtidatta when the elder son of the latter died within seven days of his initiation and out of indifference and aversion arising from this tragic death Vibhūtidatta did not consecrate his younger son[3] and chose, at the divine instance, to transmit knowledge to his younger son through him, i.e. Utpalaratha II. Utpalaratha learnt the entire concept of spiritual union (Melāpa) characterised by Kaulika knowledge which he conveyed to Śrīcakra, an ardent pupil of Vibhūtidatta. From Śrīcakra, the parental spiritual heritage was handed down to Viśvadatta,[4] whom Utpalaratha brought to his own residence after his teacher and maternal uncle passed away.[1] Viśvadatta soon acquired knowledge of scriptures and mastered his ancestral legacy. He was then shifted to a convent in the front yard of the temple constructed by some Kanakadatta, whose identity we have not been able to establish so far (but who may be a kith of Vibhūti-datta's clan, as the title 'datta' indicates), for perma-nent residence and was provided with a lot of mov-able and immovable assets for future maintenance.[2] Utpalaratha II, though a minister, gave himself up for the pursuance of spiritual emancipation[3] and the same thing was true of his eldest son Śivaratha who, though a minister of king Ucchala, dedicated all that he inherited from his father for human salvation and later resigned his exalted job.[4] Similarly Guṇaratha, Jayaratha's great grandfather, erected a new convent called 'Acalaśrīmaṭha' which survived, even when the whole city (i.e., Pravapura—modern Srinagar) was engulfed by fire, perhaps due to his right conduct.[1] His grandfather Guṅgaratha died prematurely[2] when his father Sṛṅgāraratha was still a child and it was his grandmother Sattvā who reared and brought him up to become a minister of king Rājarāja.[3] Thus a combined tabular chart of Jayaratha's both lineages—parental and preceptorial—emerges as on the facing page.[4]

Jayaratha's time does not present much problem. He has furnished enough evidence to conclude—it is unnecessary to go into details right now—[5] that he flourished somewhere during second half of the twelfth century (1150-1200 A.D.).

Jayaratha speaks very eloquently of his father Śṛṅgāraratha.[6] He was very close to king Rājarāja or Jayasiṁha, like mind to soul. The king fully depended on him whether the matter related to collection of money involving intermediaries or to rivers like Ledari which did not involve others.[7] He was given unrestricted authority over all the infantries and armies falling under the tributary princes and while exercising his powers as the top brass (Sarvādhikārin) he introduced a major innovation by keeping the regular forces and mercenaries separately.[1] He devoted his energies for welfare of the common man and encouraged pursuit of excellence by suitable financial gifts and grants. He created an atmosphere free from terror and subsequently developed acute devotion for Śiva, something behoving his noble heritage.[2] He was initiated into Śaivite practices by Subhaṭa Datta who later performed initiation ceremony of Jayaratha also.[3] He owed his extensive training in statecraft to Śṛngāra, son of Dāśī Rājānaka, who again seems to have imparted lessons to Jayaratha also.[4] Disgusted to see the ruinous state of some new constructions due to vagaries of nature, he carried out five renovations on the Mahādeva mountain.[5] To him and his wife Kamalā, Jayaratha and his brother Jayadratha were born exactly as nectre and moon came out from the ocean, the abode of Kamalā (Viṣṇu's spouse, goddess of riches in Hindu pantheon). These two brothers were delight to everybody and were equal in merit.[1] Jayaratha was elder of the two.[2] Jayaratha, however, does not remember his mother Kamalā so much as his grandmother Sattvā who, though a young widow, displayed tremendous forbearance and sacrifice into moulding his father what he was—a profound and versatile man. She in her own right won the unsolicited respect from the people for her virtuous conduct and total exemplary dedication to the ways of the gods and ancestors.[3]

Jayaratha speaks highly of his brother Jayadratha who though younger was his junior by a very nominal age gap and was intellectually and academically at par with his elder brother Jayaratha. Jayaratha does not throw any further light on his brother in the Tantrāloka.[4] Similarly Jayaratha, who has several works to his credit, does not refer to them in his Viveka. Perhaps he wanted to compose his Viveka as a touchstone for evaluation of his scholarship by posterity.[1]

(b) Two groups of teachers: second group casting stronger formative influence

Coming to his teachers he mentions four by name who fall into two groups of two each. The first group consisted of Subhaṭa Datta and Śṛṅgāra and the other of Kalyāṇa and Śaṅkhadhara. Jayaratha gratefully acknowledges the deeprooted contribution of the second group in sharpening his academic and spiritual calibre. Subhaṭa Datta, being the linear descendent in the official tradition, was the natural choice to perform his initiation.[2] He seems to be an older contemporary of Jayaratha because he initiated Jayaratha's father also as we have already seen. Subhaṭa Datta wrote a commentary[3] on the Tantrāloka for the sake of Śṛṅgāraratha[4] who acquired substantial command over the Śaiva scriptures from him. Jayaratha makes it absolutely clear that while Subhaṭa Datta was his father's teacher, he was responsible for Jayaratha's initiation only. Subhaṭa Datta was the son of Tribhuvana Datta and grandson of Viśvadatta. It is this Viśvadatta who is perhaps remembered as

'Parameṣṭhīguru' (great grandteacher) by Jayaratha who ascribes a verse to him and presumably presents him as a Krama author.[1]

There is one more reference to Jayaratha's grand teacher (Paramaguru) whose authority has been once invoked by Jayaratha in quelling doubts about one's preference for a particular tradition (out of several options prevailing) as authentic and final. He is credited with the view that one's preference will ultimately depend upon one's preceptorial stand.[2] This view is cited to support Jayaratha's contention that his treatment of Krama tradition bears the stamp of his teacher's authority. It is difficult to say if this Paramaguru was Tribhuvanadatta or Subhaṭadatta. Chances are that Jayaratha's reference tends towards Tribhuvana datta because Subhaṭadatta, circumstantially though Paramaguru, was technically Guru as it was he who initiated Jayaratha into Śaiva spiritualism. It is, however, very interesting to note that Jayaratha claims direct access to Krama tradition emanating from Bhānuka (850-900 A.D.). While Govindarāja, Bhānuka's classmate, handed down the tradition through Somānanda,[1] the parallel tradition was lineally transmitted to Jayaratha through Ujjaṭa and Udbhata etc.[2] Although Jayaratha claims to be in possession of both the traditions as also the others, he is direct lineal repository of the tradition from Bhānuka. Since we have no trace of any other person having mastered Krama secrets in the whole preceptorial genealogy other than Viśvadatta, Jayaratha's great grandteacher, it may not be absolutely off the mark to surmise that Jayaratha's regular linear preceptorial ancestors emanating from Lakṣmī Datta, who also happend to be the ruler of a place called Gañja and perhaps flourished around last quarter of the tenth century (975-1023) and was chronologically quite close to Udbhaṭa (900-950 A.D.) and Ujjaṭa (875-925 A.D.) with a few missing links in between, constituted the regular vehicle for the transmission of that tradition.[3] Our knowledge about Subhaṭadatta does not go beyond this point. The other teacher in this group is Śṛṅgāra, teacher of Śṛṅgāraratha —Jayaratha's father—in political science. However, by the use of 'also' (Api in Mamāpi) Jayaratha seems to imply that he also learnt something of political affairs from Sṛṅgāra.[4]

It is the second group of teachers that wielded considerable influence on the making of Jayaratha—as an academician and as a top grade spiritualist both. He is avowedly indebted to Śaṅkhadhara for his proficiency in all the secular sciences[1] including the science of grammar, the science of linguistic interpretation propounded by Jaimini and all other empirical disciplines.[2] Śaṅkhadhara was perhaps known as Saṅgadhara[3] (if it is not a scribal aberration) also. He owed his acquisition of all the Śaivite learning and insight into Śaiva scriptures to Kalyāṇa, who was an embodiment of the divine.[4] In fact Jayaratha's blissful experience flowing from the realization of oneness of Śiva is exclusively due to him, who was instrumental in removing all the dirt and mental fickleness.[5] No other teacher except Kalyāṇa has claimed reverence from Jayaratha in glowing terms in the opening verses of the Tantrālokaviveka where he is likened to an ocean whose drops of compassion made Jayaratha self-realized without the fall of mortal frame[6] and whose sermons were carried out with the same zeal by the kings, as crowns over their heads.[1]

Jayaratha offers a very intimate insight into the matters of his personal teachers. While commenting upon the T.A. 13.342[2]—blessed is the disciple who gets a teacher perfect in wisdom—Jayaratha cites his own example.[3] Jayaratha considers himself extremely fortunate in having attended on Kalyāṇa and Śaṅkhadhara who were teachers of perfect knowledge—Kalyāṇa in Śaiva spiritualism of monistic-dualistic character and Śaṅkhadhara in the secular disciplines of grammar, linguistics and logic. Incidentally our knowledge is highly deficient in regard to the written contribution, if at all, made by his teachers. Jayaratha cites the views of his teacher only thrice in the whole of Viveka—once in connection with the interpretation of the term Mūla in the Tantrāloka[4], the second time while stating the reasons behind his opting for the Devyāyāmala's standpoint on Śikhābīja in preference to the Triśirobhairava's[5] and the third time while substantiating Abhinava's description of real Homa[1] (In fact the third one is the only direct statement from his teacher). Presumably these views belong to Kalyāna as the context is patently Śaivite one. Jayaratha owes three things to his teacher—one, he was able to annihilate all the distracting determinate ideas;[2] two, he was not easily vulnerable;[3] and three, he had imbibed the Kaulika experience personally.[4] In fact Jayaratha was a self-realized person during his lifetime.[5] By any standard these are not mean achievements and speak highly of the calibre of his teacher.

(c) Personal achievements

Going by the gleanings from his statements Jayaratha, to top everything, was a Jīvanmukta[6]—the summum bonum of all spiritual seekers. He was constantly in the state of mental harmony marked by divine ecstacy.[7] He also suggests that he was the

He was an accomplished Yogin who exercised excellent command over the contemplation of the movement of breath—respiratory and downward both.[2] Free from all doubts he was imbued with a sense of beatific serenity and his realization of Absolutic harmony induced a feeling of total resignation from mundane affairs.[3] Yet his synthetic personality remains transparent as ever. In the last concluding verse of his Viveka he proudly portrays himself as an encyclopaedic genius springing from a unique blend of empirical and metempirical disciplines.[4] Thus he appears to be well-versed in grammar, linguistics, logic, secrets of all Śaiva scriptures and none could excel his ingenuity whether it was Trika philosophy or Krama metaphysics. According to the colophon of the Tantrāloka, he earned the same title of being a super-teacher in Maheśvara's cult[1] as did his master Abhinava. He seems to have enjoyed a fairly long life, as he talks of being quite ripe in age when he completed the remained Tantrāloka Viveka.[2] His mission might have abortive had it not received tremendous encouragement from his royal patron Rājarāja alias Jayasiṁha, whose inspiration proved to be the real instrument behind the writing of the Viveka.[3]

(II) The Tantrālokaviveka

(a) An extension of and supplement to the Tantrāloka

Composition of the Tantrālokaviveka was a lifetime mission for Jayaratha. He worked assiduously for a major part of his life and the day his mammoth undertaking reached fruition, a feeling of creative joy overtook him.[4] It was the result of a persistent, regular, long-drawn hard work in discovering the essential meaning of Abhinava's magnum opus. The successful completion seems to be the end result of his exploiting all the existing source material. In this sense the Tantrālokaviveka is not just a commentary, it is the continued extension of the Tantrāloka.

At every step he is aware of the complexity and massiveness of the project because it demanded close familiarity with practically all sources of knowledge and highlighted one's apparent difficulty in treading the impassable jungle of Śaivite discipline made all the more impervious by the perplexity in bringing out real intent of the scriptures belonging to the conflicting source-bases.[1] He, therefore, owns up full responsibility for all the failings that might have crept in and humbly craves for indulgence from the sympathetic readers. Among his immediate supporting sources, it appears, were certain commentaries. One such commentary was Vivaraṇa, authored by his family preceptor Subhaṭa Datta, which however seems to have cast little impact on him[2] despite the fact that it greatly enlightened Jayaratha's father. In the Tantrāloka he is invariably guided by his teacher Kalyāna, and not Subhaṭa Datta. Perhaps, another commentary was Unmeṣa by an unknown author[3] whose views were ignored by Jayaratha. In any case there were several, numerous one may add, interpretations[1] of various portions and whether they crystallised into book form—today we are not in a position to say. We are, however, inclined to believe that there did exist commentaries which invited criticism from Jayaratha.[2] Indeed it is our misfortune that these are not extant today. It may, therefore, be propounded with certain amount of certainty that criticism of existing commentaries was one of the devices resorted to by Jayaratha to build up his work. From the very beginning of his Viveka, Jayaratha leaves us in little doubt about his motives. He took up the Viveka not because he wanted to establish himself as an author, nor was he keen to display his unique felicity in expression. It was his sole urge to let the determinate ideas culminate into perfect awareness[3] consequent upon careful consideration of its meaning. Jayaratha seems to have had three types of audience in mind—(1) the ignorant, (ii) the hostile or envious, and (iii) the doubtful. While he does not mount any attack on those who were yet to arrive on the scene he is determined to address his work to all the three classes of audience[4]—whether past or present—alike who without grasping the inherent purport have indulged in deliberate show of their expressionist talent. Thus he primarily assumes the role of an educator, a critic and an umpire all blended into one. He indeed sets himself to a formidable task.

The sense of mission was so profound that it led him to procure each and every text, having slightest bearing on the subject. It was a sort of hunting spree and he was constantly on the search, on his own admission, to devise innumerable devices in order to get hold of such texts.[1] As is natural, his ceaseless effort made it possible for him to take the glossorial job in his stride and a moment came when he did not take time to explain[2], yet he was able to turn out the greatest or the most exalted commentary[3].

(b) TITLE

This superb commentary is now commonly known as the Viveka (i.e., discernment) and has been so designated in the introductory lines appearing in the beginning of the text.[4] But subsequently in most of the title lines[1] as well as the colophons[2] it is remembered as the Prakāśa (light). Sometimes name Viveka has been retained in chapter-colophons[3] also. Once Jayaratha describes it as the Vivaraṇa also.[4] It therefore, transpires that Jayaratha was not very fastidious about the name and himself allowed both the nomenclatures to be used alternatively.

(c) FUNDAMENTAL MOTIVES

(i) Attainment of the Godhead

The basic aim of Jayaratha in attempting a gloss on the Tantraloka is the same as Abhinava's—to inculcate intellectual framework necessary for attainment of the Godhead or Self-Absolute,[5] yet he does not unnecessarily drag on with this. Unlike Abhinava, who is out to secure divine grace for all creatures, Jayaratha would be content if his attempt succeeds in enlightening just one man. In fact, he prefers to remain self-confined and dedicates, like his glorious master, his work as an offering to the Godhead.[6]

(iii) Restoration and preservation of the Tantrāloka

The undercurrent of his entire effort, nevertheless, remains to explore and project the Tantrāloka as he steers it clear through the mess that had pervaded all ranks of the scholarship by his time.

Jayaratha is replete with unmistakeable signs towards the existence of this anarchy. Often he becomes very harsh on these confusion-mongering elements. During his examination of the actual chronology of the propagators of Krama system and their traditional viewpoint, he asks the reader to ignore such people who lack scholastic tradition, have not applied their brain to the scripture as well as preceptorial school and are devoid of any commonsense of their own.[1] Sometimes he himself overlooks many apparent discrepancies.[2] We shall soon see several instances of such confusion where Jayaratha's reconciliatory instinct comes to the fore. By the time of Jayaratha, the Tantrāloka's text seems to have acquired several interpretations—sometimes equally weighty—all of which were admitted by him as possible alternatives. Take for instance the word 'Sadṛśa' (similar) in the T.A. 3.5,[1] or 'Kāṭhinyābhāvataḥ' (because of the lack of solidity[2]) in the T.A. 3.20 which attracted two alternative explanations. This could be equally probable that Jayaratha himself, for want of absolute certainty, offers alternative explanations. Opposition to Abhinava's views in the internal circle appears to have gained considerable ground and Jayaratha has to take upon himself to re-establish Abhinava. His frequent tips of endorsement[3] bring us to the same conclusion. Similarly Jayaratha suggests that there was great opposition from one section of scholars to the concept of Tattva-bheda (sub-division of categories), particularly the theory of fifteen subdivisions, since he asks his counterparts to shun antagonism and see reason.[4] Jayaratha himself draws our attention to the complete anarchy that prevailed with regard to the textual reading and order of certain particular portions among the various commentators.[1] The illustrations may be multiplied to show that the atmosphere inherited by Jayaratha was surcharged with suspicion, confusion and ignorance and Jayaratha discharged a formidable task in restoring the correct order and resurrecting the genuine traditional position.

Jayaratha's obsession with restoring the correct traditional thesis is so ardent and deep-rooted, and in a sense essential, if we keep in view his professed mission, that he raises stormy controversies, investigates into them and then outlines the exact traditional stand.

One of several controversies hinted at by Abhinava relates to the exact number of Kālīs ordained by the Kramastotra (by Siddhanātha). Abhinava was a great champion of twelve-Kālīs theory in his Tantrāloka, but the confusion resulted from misapprehending the proper approach of Abhinava on the issue whose sole aim was to present Saṁvit-krama while others including the Pañcaśatika and a section of the Kramastotra's commentators were guided by their eagerness to conceal Saṁvitkrama and present Pūjākrama.[2] This problem arose in the wake of Abhinava's bringing in Raktakālī, instead

We are, however, not quite sure if विवरणकृताम् here refers to the Kramastotra (K.T. p. 179) alone or the Tantrāloka.

2. इह तु पूजाक्रमगोपनाय स्वशय्ययैव स्थापनम्, यदधिकृत्य संवित्क्रमः परिनिष्ठितिमियात्, अतएवागमैकशरणतया प्रवृत्तेऽपि श्रीक्रमस्तोत्रे ग्रन्थकृतां अभिनवगुप्तानां संवित्क्रममेव प्रदर्शयितुं तद्विवृतौ . . . . इत्याद्युक्तम्। of Sthitīkālī, after Sṛṣṭikālī.[1] Similarly Abhinava's exclusion of Sukālī from the list of Kālīs evoked a furore among die-hards because it made Abhinava subscribe to the notion of twelve Kālīs admitted in Anākhyacakra according to the Sārdhaśatika. Jayaratha examines the objection from every possible angle—scriptural authority, textual testimony, doctrinal consistency, chronological continuity, contextual propriety, scribal authenticity and colateral evidence—and resolves that Abhinava's stand in entertaining only twelve Kālīs in Anākhyacakra is unimpeachable.[2] In the same vain Jayaratha goes on scrutinizing even the historical inaccuracies and sets the chronological record straight. He says with a pinch of salt that these contemporaries do not know anything[3] about Abhinava's preceptorial tradition and claims to be in direct receipt of the traditional secrets supplying several missing links on Cakrabhānu, Kakāradevī, Somarāja, Hrasvanātha, etc. and the real purport of the Kramastotra.[4] He then comes to the well-settled principle that one cannot extract a piece in isolation —the text has to be accepted or rejected as a whole —and although in the case of alternative positions one's sheet anchor is bound to be one's preceptorial teaching, Jayaratha finds his conclusion unaffected on either version of the original text.[1] This controversy has been raised earlier also on more philosophical footing with the conclusion that there is no scope at all for the thirteenth form otherwise it will render the twelve forms as non-modes of consciousness.[2] Although the theory of thirteen forms may be justified with reference to the empirical subject, it has no ground metaphysically.[3] In fact such a sharp division of respective standpoints led to two different schools within Krama system and was responsible for historically different lines of growth.

Jayaratha refers to another controversy in the course of his treatment of the 'passage of space' (Deśādhva). The context relates to the regions as obtaining within the category of earth. There were varying agamic positions. For example, the stands taken up by the Nandisikhātantra and the Triśirsobhairava did not tally with that by the Siddhātantra. Similarly there was some difference of opinion if the region presided over by the god Ananta lay within waters or above it. Jayaratha examines all aspects in detail and concludes that internal existtence has to be construed as external existence and in fact internality or externality was not the point at issue, what was intended was the 'sequence' alone. Viewed in this light the alleged opposition between the Siddhātantra and others will evaporate. This does not even militate against the position accepted by the Tantrarāja Bhaṭṭāraka. Jayaratha does not deny the distinctive character of various positions; what he wants to bring home is their structural and scholastic compatibility.[1]

It is neither possible nor advisable to take stock of all such situations for reasons of space. We will, therefore, refer to one more instance and then proceed further. In the course of discussion on the cosmic passage called Kalā (crest) Abhinava does not stop at the ultimate reality, i.e. Śiva, being 36th category but talks of thirtyseventh and thirtyeighth category also ruling out any scope for the fallacy

1. The controversy consumes about 8 pages (T.A.V., IV, pp. 1365-72)but the following remark from the Viveka is significant—

यच्च श्रीसिद्धातन्त्रोक्तं भुवनमानमिह न ग्राह्यम्—इत्युक्तं तदप्ययुक्तम्, यतो यदि नाम नरकादिवदनन्तभुवनस्येह मानं किंचिदुच्येत तत्प्रक्रियाभेदादन्यतन्त्रोक्तमग्राह्यमेव इति स्यात्। भुवनस्य मानमवश्यंभावि तच्चेह नोक्तम्, इति तदाकांक्षायामेव अवश्यमेवान्यतः कुतश्चिदपेक्षणीयम् इति को नाम श्रीसिद्धातंत्रे प्रद्वेषः। यद्वा श्रीतन्त्रराजभट्टारकेऽपि अस्य लक्षोच्छ्रितत्वमुक्तम् इति तदपेक्ष्यतां, को नाम नो निर्बन्धः, यावता हि अस्माकमन्तर्भुवनमानसंख्याया आसमञ्जस्यमभिधानीयं तच्च उभयथापि सिद्ध्येत् इत्यलं बहुना। T.A.V., IV, pp. 1370-71

called infinite regress.[1] Abhinava's view, Jayaratha suggests, was first attacked on the counts of (i) lack of reason[2] and (ii) absence of scriptural evidence[3] and then on those of (iii) doubtful support[4] and (iv) deviation from the normally accepted position.[5] Jayaratha again gets quite harsh on the critics who having avoided pains of sitting at the feet of a teacher are utterly confused about real intent of Abhinava or the scriptural position.[6] Although the ultimate reality is correctly accepted as thirtysixth category yet the problem is how to account for immanence if it is considered transcendent and for objectivity or knowability if it is viewed as subject or knower. Jayaratha finds both of these anomalies resolved by the enunciation of the 37th and 38th stages.[1] He also says that Abhinava's basic approach is to expatiate upon the agamic viewpoint even in preference to the generally accepted thesis.[2]

(iv) Furnishing chronological continuity

As a part of his ardent responsibility Jayaratha, as we have pointed out earlier also, has worked hard on chronological accounts of the preceptorial lineages and has always abided by the preceptorial authority. Jayaratha himself recognizes this to be his prime contribution in the Viveka. In his Vāmakeśvarīmatavivaraṇa he emphatically avers that those who have interpreted or referred to the Tantrāloka without having access to the teacher and for that matter uninterrupted tradition have only lent themselves to great ridicule[3]. In fact his account of Krama and Kula histories and several other important authors on Kashmir Śaivism is invaluable. For instance Niṣkriyānandanātha, Vidyānanda, Śaktyānanda, Śivānanda and his three female disciples, Govindarāja, Bhānuka, Eraka, Ujjaṭa, Udbhaṭṭa, the Stotrakāra alias Siddhanātha, Bhāskara, Bhūtirāja I, Kuladhara, Bhojarāja, Somarāja, Śivānanda II, own ancestral and doctrinal lineages, linear expanse of Traiyambaka, Sumatinātha, Somadeva and Śambhunātha are some of those celebrated personages about whom our knowledge depends on Jayaratha sometimes exclusively and sometimes in a very large measure. For fear of detail and reasons of space and propriety we propose to abandon our enquiry here.[1] One thing, however, is absolutely certain that not only he has direct access to the tradition but also deep insight into it and leaves no stone unturned to make sure that the reader is convinced about the stamp of finality and authenticity that he puts on it.[2]

(d) Handling of the source material

(i) Four progressive phases and their several dimensions

Jayaratha closely follows the footsteps of his master. His major contribution lies in opening floodgates of our information on the source-material. Thus like the Tantrāloka, the Viveka, too, emerges as a major reliable sourcebook on the basic sources with several dimensions to it. There is a discernible progression in Jayaratha's handling of the material and it passes through the following phases—

(I) Material drawn upon by Abhinava—Identification, structural information, citation, possible and relevant restoration, critical determination and interpretation;

(II) Material produced after Abhinavagupta—allusion, scrutinization, possible restoration, textual settlement and discovery of inter se relationship;

(III) Gaps creating deviations or controversies—enumeration and reconciliation; and

(IV) Additional information—substantiation, textual determination, rationalization, underlining potentialities, textual restoration and the furnishing of cultural information.

(ii) Material drawn upon by Abhinava

We are afraid that in an attempt like the present 'Introduction' it is well nigh impossible to do away with overlapping altogether as emphases vary with angles, approaches and context. Towards supplying the source material Jayaratha's job is manifold. The first is identification of the text or source, if Abhinava makes an unassertive reference. The second in the same connection is to identify the exact portion of the source and to cite from it, if necessary, in case Abhinava names a source but withholds further information. For instance, the word Ādi in the T.A. 1.46,[1] according to Jayaratha, stands for an agamic text belonging to the dualistic branch of Śaivism called Cillācakreśvarī-mata followed by an extract.[2] Similarly the Ratnamālā in the Tantrā- loka[1] is identified as the Kularatnamālā[2] (we get the complete title). Jayaratha also enlightens us that this reference is to the content and purport of the Ratnamālā and not to its language. He then goes on giving several excerpts from it.[3] The verb 'Pracakṣate'[4] (i.e., say), though vague, stands for the Parātriṁśikā according to Jayaratha who mentions the exact relevant spot in the mentioned text.[5] Similarly 'Āgame'[6] in the T.A. 4.148 stands for the Pañcaśatika[7]—it is only on the authority of Jayaratha that we know it. Jayaratha cites the relevant portion as well. Jayaratha, it seems, abhors vagueness and scrupulously furnishes zero-error information. While discussing Abhinava's allusion to the Mataṅgaśāstra[8], Jayaratha specifically reminds the reader that the actual reference is to the commentary on the Mataṅgaśāstra and not to the Āgama proper[9] in order to avoid unnecessary elaboration. He then offers us a glimpse of the versicular commentary under reference. In fact it is impossible to understand the Tantrāloka without the aid of the Viveka. In a single continued treatment Abhinava alludes to the respective orders of the five sheaths (Kañcukas) according to the Sarvajñānottara, Svāyambhuva, Kiraṇa and Mātaṅga-pārameśvara,[1] but in the Tantrāloka's text the Svāyambhuva is nowhere mentioned even obliquely. It is by the analysis of the contents that Jayaratha finds an unmistakeable appeal to the authority of the Svāyambhuva.[2] On the same pattern Jayaratha hints that Abhinavagupta is not simply referring to but also quoting and in such a case he completes[3] an incomplete quote.[4] Thus we see that Jayaratha does not restrict himself to the provision of name alone, he tries to discover the underlying source. This attitude is profusely reflected in places like the discussion of Mālinīnyāsa[5] (an assignment called Mālinī) where Abhinavagupta does not take us into confidence about his agamic base, but Jayaratha comes forward with references to and quotations from the Siddhātantra as well as the Triśirobhairava and underscores the similarity they have with other tantras like the Matabhaṭṭāraka on this issue.[1]

In addition to the above-noted information Jayaratha's job includes the furnishing of structural information in respect of the cited source material. It is rendered possible by affording an insight into the quoted extract. Abhinavagupta, for example, quotes the Kiraṇāgama to substantiate the relationship of path and destination (Upāya-upeya-bhāva) as subsisting between the power and the power-ful.[2] Here Jayaratha comes to our rescue saying that this Āgama had a question-answer format where Garuḍa is the inquirer while the Godhead assumes the role of the answerer. It is this long dialogue between the two (of which specific portions have been earmarked by Jayaratha) that has been drawn upon by Abhinavagupta and put in his own words for the sake of brevity.[3] Likewise the Triśirobhairava was also in the form of a dialogue between the Goddess and the God where Devī asks and Śiva answers. We owe this information to Jayaratha, who pinpoints the portion actually quoted by Abhinavagupta.[4]

This Āgama was divided into several chapters called Paṭalas.[1] Similarly the Ūrmimahāśāstrasiddha Santānarūpaka as presented by Abhinavagupta[2] happened to be identical with Kula text Ūrmikaulasiddhasantānarūpaka and was in the form of a dialogue between Devī and Śiva and had one of the chapters called Pādovallī dealing with preceptorial genealogy.[3]

It is no use multiplying instances. Jayaratha's another major contribution lies in retaining certain important pre-Abhinavan sources in more or less complete form. The preservation of the Kramastotra, attributed by us to Siddhanātha elsewhere,[4] in somewhat intact shape[5] in the pages of fourth Āhnika[6] is a classic example of the same. Similar is the case with the Pañcaśatika, etc. In a sense Jayaratha's coverage is no less wider than that of his master.

The greatest task, however, consists in his editing the text critically and determining the precise reading. Jayaratha seems to have worked religiously on it. Here his job is twofold. On the one he handles the agamic texts alluded to and/or quoted by Abhinavagupta or by himself and on the other he handles the text of the Tantrāloka. For the timebeing we concentrate on the former alone. In critically handling the source texts he rectifies the incorrect reading—whether due to scribal mistake or due to misinformation—, indicates his preference out of the two or more seemingly equal readings, reconciles differing scriptural positions, criticizes his own schoolmen for their deviations and preferences for other readings, and finally arranges the texts in a natural and logical order. To appreciate better, let us look into some illustrative instances. At one place[1] Jayaratha discusses the original Āgama, i.e. Svāyambhuva, and holds that the reading Kalā, which he chanced to see in older manuscripts, has to be accepted in preference to the common reading Kāla without which the Abhinavan text would militate against the Kiraṇa Āgama.[2] At another, Jayaratha retains Dvitīyām in the quoted text in preference to Tṛtīyām Caturthīm,[3] as adopted by a section of misguided scholars while commenting upon Abhinavagupta who draws upon the Siddhayogīśvaramata in respect of the seat-worship (Āsanārcana) and invokes the contents thereof[1], because it will lead to unnecessary repetition when construed with the Siddhātantra. In the same context he resolves the textual order and implies that 'Sārdhākṣarām' qualifies 'Dvayīm'—the two are not independent.[2] As seen earlier, Jayaratha not only identifies the quoted text but goes a step further. He pinpoints exact reading[3] in the original source in case Abhinavagupta does not strictly adhere to the 'original'.[4] Here Abhinavagupta reads Pūrṇāṁ and Kṛśāṁ while it is Pīnāṁ and Durbalāṁ in the original Vijñānabhairava. Jayaratha, at a different place, quotes from a tantra, probably the Siddhātantra if one goes by the contextual evidence, after correction of Ūnā into Ūnām stating his reasons for doing so.[5] He meets the anticipated criticism by further reasoning.[6] At another place[7] Abhinava draws upon the Mṛtyuñjaya-tantra for his notion of independent assignment (Svatantra Nyāsa) pertaining to the ultimate-cum-nonultimate deity. Jayaratha has adopted the reading 'Ekaikam dvayaṅgulam' in preference to 'Ekaikadyaṅgulam' and vehemently ridicules those who opt for such a reading by a curious mixture of the preceding and the following confusing both because such a reading clearly nullifies the original agamic reading, brings in the element of farfetched imagination, lacks the use of the word 'again' and also violates the explanations offered by the teachers.[1] These examples, though handful, will indeed help us gather an idea about Jayaratha's careful diligence.

The next step Jayaratha takes is to accord a proper interpretation. He addresses himself to the task of giving the most appropriate and relevant interpretation. As a rule he feels shy of bringing in other interpretations in spite of their probability. Nor does he harp on their patent mutual inconsistency, if the same is irrelevant. It is of course very natural for Jayaratha to hunt out the exact basic source behind Abhinava's specific thesis or pronouncement. For example, while initiating discussion on the 'division of day and night' as a sequel to the 'movement of breath' (Prāṇacāramāna) he underscores Abhinava's heavy dependence upon the Svacchanda Tantra. But it is also his bounden duty to point out the lines on which the source authority is to be understood with a warning of the impending negative results. Abhinava invokes the authority of the Parā- gruous interpretation. For instance, he explains the word Antaḥ in Abhinava's text, which is based on the Devyāyāmala Tantra in the context, not as 'within' but as 'just above it'.[1] But in arriving at this interpretation he has to compare and contrast a host of Āgamas and synthesize their anomalous stands and then to conclude that Abhinavagupta's leaning towards a general, and hence casual, survey is sometimes responsible for such expressions. Jayaratha intends his method to be a trend setter for interpretation of the cognate tantric material.[2]

(iii) Pre-Abhinavan tantric material

The same approach permeates his handling of the tantric material, whether of Abhinavan, pre-, or post-Abhinavan era. In the absence of a clearly worked-out chronological analysis of this material our remarks have to be limited to the works quoted by Jayaratha on his own. Very often he draws upon those sections of pre-Abhinavan material which have remained untouched by Abhinavagupta. Despite Abhinavagupta's extensive coverage, a lot of material from hitherto unknown sources has found its way into Jayaratha which is of immense value for any future chronicle of tantric history. Of all the works referred to by Jayaratha, his allusions to the Śrīkaṇṭhī are highly significant[1] for the study of the ten Śiva tantras, eighteen Rudra tantras and sixtyfour Bhairava tantras (divided into eight groups) belonging to the dualistic, dualistic-cum-monistic and monistic schools. Jayaratha gives a few lengthy quotations incorporating the names of all the tantras.[2] Though it is difficult to ascertain its period, the first ever reference to it is found in the Uddyota of Kṣemarāja on the Svacchanda Tantra[3] which also testifies to Jayaratha's description about the subject-matter. Among other agamic texts he refers to the Kramasadbhāva, Sārdhaśatika, Ānandeśvaratantra, Pañcāmṛta Bhūtakṣobha, Anantavijaya, Kulakramodaya and Kula-krīḍāvatāra for the first time. As is usual he not only quotes but also informs about their formal structure, subject matter and crucial points which evoked special interest. For instance, the Krama sadbhāva was an Āgama of Nigama class and there was a sharp difference of opinion whether it advocated worship of sixteen or seventeen deities.[4]

The Sārdhaśatika, which Jayaratha quotes four times[1], closely follows on the heels of the Pañcaśatika and explicitly differs from the Kramasadbhāva regarding the order. Similarly it is to his credit that we know that the Ānandeśvara-tantra comprised twelve thousand verses.[2] According to Dwivedi it was possibly a tantra belonging to the Left Path.[3] It advocated Tarpaṇa (offering libations of water) with the aid of the thumb and the middle finger. The Bhūtakṣobha[4] and Pañcāmṛta[5] were other two Āgamas that followed the trail. The Anantavijaya was a tantra belonging to Siddhānta Śaivism which Jayaratha considers extremely dissimilar.[6] He falls back upon it because the matter under reference has not been treated in sister tantras. The Kulakramodaya, perhaps a Kula tantra, was devoted to the discussion of the method of assignment in the body conceived as a spiritual seat. As one of the topics Jayaratha specifically mentions the part of the text that focussed on the issue.[7] Jayaratha's references to

In addition, a substantial number of innumerable references to the unidentified Āgamas, which until independently distinguished, must belong to Āgamas of this period.

(iv) Source material provided by the known authors

The other segment of the source-material is provided by the works of known authors. Among these Abhinavagupta occupies the place of glory. Besides references to his famous treatises like Īśvarpratyabhijñā-vimarśinī, Tantrasāra, Tantrāloka, Annuttrāṣṭikā and Paramārthasāra, Jayaratha earns our gratitude for his reference to the Kramakeli, Abhinavagupta's celebrated commentary on the Kramastotra by Siddhanātha. The early history of Krama system would not be possible without the rich material provided by Jayaratha from this text.[2] Jayaratha, apparently cites a long quote throwing enormous

(v) Post-Abhinavagupta tantric material: general

Towards the post-Abhinavagupta period Jayaratha's references to Somarāja,[3] Bhojarāja and his suspected work Kramakamala[4] are very important towards reconstruction of the history of Krama system. It is for the first time again that we hear of some Praśastibhūtipāda[5] and Tapasvirāja[6] in the pages of the Viveka. Similarly his mention of his great grandteacher Viśvadatta, his grandteacher[7] Tribhuvanadatta and teacher Kalyāṇa,[8] as we have already noted in a different context, lend tremendous help towards capturing the evolution of monistic thought in Kashmir. His unnamed citations[9] which are traceable to the Mahānayaprakāśa,[10] published in Trivendrum Sanskrit Series and assigned to Śivānanda II by us,[1] offer unimpeachable evidence of direct North-South dialogue after Madhurāja Yogin, Abhinava's junior contemporary and author of the Gurunāthaparāmarśa.

(a) JAYARATHA VS. KṢEMARĀJA

His treatment of Kṣemarāja, however, is by far the most remarkable event of this phase, which reflects his uncompromising fervour for a thoroughly scientific study of the tantric material. Notwithstanding his innocuous references to the Pratyabhijñāhṛdaya[2], he has virtually mounted an attack on Kṣemarāja when it comes to the precise handling of the agamic sources. It is here we find Jayaratha sincerely translating his abiding commitment of keeping the misguided and the confused at bay from the sacrosanct domain of the tantric studies.

The Svacchanda Tantra is one of the premier sources of authority for the Tantrāloka next in importance to the Mālinīvijayottara Tantra. Jayaratha, in his unswerving desire to supply the root material for correct understanding of the Tantrāloka, profusely quotes (more than 300 times) the relevant portions from the SV.T. and in this process he frequently finds Kṣemarāja's readings and organisation of the text as adopted in the latter's commentary "Uddyota" quite misleading. Luckily the text of the Kṣemarāja's commentary and the text as available to or adopted by him is available in print in KSTS (Vols. 31, 38, 44, 48, 51, 53, 56; pub. 1921-1935) and the same may be referred to for a handy appraisal. It also shows that the agamic text was in a fluid state and a critical edition of the same was attempted by Jayaratha and Kṣemarāja both. The size and number of regions (Purāṇāṁ Parimāṇam) in the eighth Āhnika, for example, is obviously based on the SV.T. According to Jayaratha the T.A. 8. 132-138 specifically covers SV.T. 10. 431-464. Here Jayaratha reproduces exact verses[1-2] from the SV.T. which correspond to the SV.T. 10.453-54[3] and 10.432[4] in the printed edition and warns the student not to be duped by Kṣemarāja's readings[5]. He accordingly settles down for Viṣāvarte and Pañcāśat for Saṁvarta and Śatād. In the same context Jayaratha upholds Abhinavagupta's mention of Rūpavratā[6] which is not found in Kṣema's text at all. He digs at Kṣemarāja that the latter possibly has missed the relevant second half of the

1. K.T., pp. 202-203
2. T.A.V., II, p. 554

Here the readings adopted by Jayaratha and Kṣemarāja both are same. The editors give a variant in the fn. I (SV.T., V., p. 184) as पंचाशयोजनादूर्ध्वं which seems to have been the reading, as available to Jayaratha, in Kṣema's text. This gains strength in view of Kṣema's commentary on the subsequent verse (SV.T. 10.433) and seems to have come in for criticism.

verse as quoted by Jayaratha and therefore we need not be confused by Kṣema's omission.[1] Jayaratha clearly implies that the correct text must have the additional half verse. Just on the contrary, Jayaratha does not have certain verses in the original text, though Kṣema has them. While commenting upon the Tantrāloka 8.73,[2] Jayaratha quotes two verses in succession[3] which correspond to the SV.T. 10.227 and 10.229 apparently omitting the SV.T. 10.228[4]. In the aquatic category (Jala-tattva) Abhinavagupta posits thirteen regions.[5] Kṣemarāja's relative reading seems to have different implication unacceptable to Jayaratha.[6] One may go deeper and deeper. In Abhinavagupta's scheme of categories (Tattvayojana) everything other than Śiva is to be deemed as bondage in nature and so all the nine powers from Vāmā to Manonmanī in the region of impure knowledge (Aśuddha-vidyā) turn out to be binding in character.[1] Jayaratha, as usual, traces the precise textual authority to back Abhinavagupta's statement and also exploits the occasion to castigate Kṣemarāja. He not only has a different reading but finds Kṣema's preference for male deities to female ones as absurd,[2] because those people are clumsy who talk of nine female powers instead of nine male deities simply because of textual reading.[3] In the continuing context of categories Abhinavagupta describes Śakti-category to be obscured by knowledge (Māna or Pramāṇa) and inhabited by the two Rudras namely Tejasvin and Dhruveśa.[4] According to Jayaratha, Abhinava has the sanction from the SV.T. and the Nandiśikhātantra but disagrees with Kṣemarāja's reading which places Pramāṇa's obscurity just above Śakti and not at par.[1] According to Abhinavagupta the region called Sādākhya is the proper abode of Sadāśiva[2] and is covered or obscured by Śiva alone, while Kṣemarāja assigns Sadāśiva-region just above Īśvara and just below Sadāśiva. Jayaratha charges Kṣemarāja with tampering with the original SV.T. by imaginary interpolation of an half-verse which has been disregarded by the learned. Even if this addition be deemed to be genuine, argues Jayaratha, it does not vindicate Kṣema's contention. It supports Abhinavagupta's stand instead, because the abode and the resident have the same level of subsistence. It is only on such a construction that the Nandiśikhātantra, too, may yield a consistent meaning. One, therefore, must guard himself against the misguiding interpretation offered by Kṣemarāja[3]. It is indeed premature to suspect whether Kṣemarāja and Jayaratha belonged to different preceptorial traditions or Jayaratha nursed some grouse against his senior Kṣemarāja in order to wrest the place of honour from him among the post-Abhinavan scholarship, yet what surprises the modern reader most is Jayaratha's going to the extreme of charging Kṣema with deliberate distortions. As another instance of such aberrations Jayaratha, while explaining Abhinavagupta's views on the purification of deed (Karmaśodhana) in respect of the spiritual apprentice called Śivadharmī[1], invokes the authority of the SV.T. and propounds that once the process of fruition has commenced in respect of one particular deed it cannot be reversed so far as that deed is concerned. On the contrary, Kṣemarāja who talks of purifying even that deed which has commenced fruition[2] is taken to task for tampering with the text, for going against the previous pronouncements and also for transgressing the scriptural injunctions.[3] Jayaratha finds no end to it on Kṣemarāja's part. In the course of Abhinava's discussion on Śivahastavidhi[1] a spiritual apprentice is said to be transformed into a Samayin by his teacher's recourse to this method leading to a kind of intimate union (Sāyujya) in Īśvara category. Jayaratha finds fault with Kṣema's interpretation of the word Iśvare as Kālāgnirudra existing below the category of earth and dubs it as lacking in scriptural testimony.[2]

(vi) Restoring tradition: fathoming inter se relationship among Āgamas

Jayaratha's critical zeal does not pause here. His abiding concern is to restore the real tradition. For this he checks up, over and above the already discussed functions, inter se relationship between the Āgamas, substantiates arguments, peeps into the background to rationalize the item under consideration, underlines latent possibilities and may even advance suggestion for a proper appraisal. While discussing the variety of dissolution (Saṁhāravaicitrya) in the sixth Āhnika he endorses Abhinava's view that Samanā represents Pralaya stage and is identical with Sadāśiva stage where the universe continues to exist in residual form. In this context he quotes the views of a sub-group who thought Pralaya stage as being one with Śiva stage.[1] He criticises the view, reasons out his position and concludes that even when Samanā is taken to be eternal, it does not dilute monism.[2] Similarly he provides relevant contextual framework. While commenting upon the Tantrāloka 8.290 he notes that though the five gross elements succeed triple egoity in the SV.T., Abhinavagupta is discussing them as part of the sixteen modifications which lead to bondage.[3] Any tantric system worth the name must discard the caste system. Hence the references to caste, according to Jayaratha's rationalization, must be construed as referring to the non-initiates or to the faithful of the lower grades.[4] Moreover, Jayaratha provides a rich source of cultural information. It appears Dinars had come in vogue as a legal tender of currency in his time.[5] It is from him that we learn that several varieties of wine were prevalent in his time and why they were distinguished. For instance Madya was produced

(e) AN EXCLUSIVE GUIDE TO THE TANTRĀLOKA

(i) Sevenfold assistance

Jayaratha's contribution to the understanding of the Tantrāloka is invaluable and indispensable. To begin with, Jayaratha provides connotative titles to all the Āhnikas. Though in most cases they reflect the clue provided by Abhinavagupta during the body of the text, it is he who offers captions. We shall discuss this aspect at the appropriate occasion. In the second place he clearly demarcates the precise textual portions dealing with general and ancillary topics, designated as Pūrvaja-and Anuja-uddeśas by Abhinavagupta.[2] We shall look into it in the course of our discussion on the arrangement and organisation of the Tantrāloka. In the third place, he acquaints us with the background view. For example he points out, notwithstanding Abhinava's silence, that in the ninth Āhnika his master wanted to criticise Tattva (category)-doctrine of the Bhogakārikā etc. (dualistic Śaivism)[3]. He not only leaves us at that but follows it up with the intermittent criticism of Śaṅkaranandana, Sadyojyoti, Devabala and Vaiśeṣikas[1]. Similarly he suggests that main target in the tenth Āhnika was to point out discrepancies in Nyāya and Bhāṭṭa Mīmāṁsā schools[2], though Abhinavagupta himself is once again silent on this point.[3] In the fourth place, he fills in the omissions of Abhinavagupta. In the twentyeighth Āhnika, Abhinavagupta talks of 23 types of occasional functions (Naimittikavidhi)[4]. Jayaratha feels that a particular 'occasional' (Naimittika) called Śivarātri is also included in the quartet beginning with Vipatpratīkāra (T.A. 28.7), the reason behind omission being the universal treatment of this item in practically all the scriptures.[5] Similarly in Dūtīyāga Abhinavagupta talks of six varieties of Dūtīs e.g. consisting of Janyā, Janikā and Sahajā in twofold relationships—physical and cognitive, and invokes the authority of the Sarvācāratantra.[6] In a significant remark Jayaratha adds that there are several sub-varieties such as Vegavatī, Saṁhārī, Trailokyakṣobhiṇī etc., but a reference to the same has been avoided[1] for fear of endless recounting. In the fifth place, he allows us a peep into Abhinavagupta's own preferences and presuppositions. The case of Rudrakālī offers a good example. Rudrakālī, which marks the seventh stage in cyclic progression of consciousness in Anākhyācakra, has been equally named as Bhadrakālī by the texts like Pañcaśatika etc., without any semantic distinction. Abhinavagupta, however, prefers the title Rudrakālī—this piece of intimation we gather from Jayaratha[2]. In the sixth place, one has to depend upon Jayaratha for a clear understanding of the esoteric implications of Abhinavagupta's treatment. For example, the textual portion dealing with the notion of virility of Mantra (Mantravīrya)[3] apparently has no esoteric semblances, yet Jayaratha finds that the first three verses deal with Parābīja (the ultimate seed) and the subsequent three with five Piṇḍanāthas.[4] Similarly Abhinavagupta's description of the six-fold movement of breath from the point of view of pervasion (Vyāpti)[5] is necessarily from that of Mantravyāpti.[1] As we have discussed in a different context earlier, Abhinavagupta's esotericism and symbolism is not at all understandable without Jayaratha's wholistic approach. The nature of Karaṇas which is spread over from 11th to 32nd Āhnikas as per declaration of Abhinavagupta himself[2] is made known by Jayaratha alone by locating exact references. Thus the Karaṇa of intelligence is dealt with in the eleventh (T.A. 11.21), of Vyāpti in the fifteenth (T.A. 15.339), of knower-known combine in the sixteenth (T.A. 16.253), of imposition as well as that of rejection in the twenty-ninth (T.A. 29.147/182) and of absorption in the thirtysecond Āhnika (T.A. 32.10 onwards)[3] by way of discussion on postures.[4] No doubt Jayaratha is aware of the limit to which he may go. With regard to the filling of Arghapātra he advises one to learn it from the mouth of a teacher, he has not touched it lest it might violate his school's code.[5] But all the same he does not withhold any information he has. The word Dīptaiḥ in depicting the nature of Mantra[6] was open to two types of meaning and he gives both.[1] And in the case of divergent opinions about a thing, particularly if the authority of the Srīpūrvaśāstra was not readily handy on such esoteric issues as Ekavīravidhāna,[2] he finally airs the view acceptable to him.[3] In the seventh place, Jayaratha brings out the inherent argument of Abhinavagupta—not only the substance but the form as well.[4] Sometimes he builds up on the syllogistic form latent in Abhinavagupta's discussion and presents the whole of it.[5]

(ii) Discharge of twin editorial obligations

The greatest contribution of Jayaratha, however, lies in his role as the editor of the text of the Tantrāloka. His handling of the Tantrāloka's text is the logical extension of his approach to the handling of the tantric source material. It has two phases. One, when he subjects the text of the Tantrāloka to rigorous criticism and undertakes to produce the standard version and two, when he critically looks into the arrangement and order of the verses in order to put a well organised text. Since we have already seen something of this in a different context, our job has become easier requiring a few samples. Jayaratha prefers the reading Vyomādiśabda[1] in place of an equally good reading[2], i.e. Vyomādiṣaṭka. Even when he retains a particular reading[3], as all the MSS available support it, he suggests a better reading.[4] In Jayaratha's original copy of the Tantrāloka the verse 3.220[5] possibly reads Mātra-(kuṇḍalinībījam) which has been rectified as Śātra (-kuṇḍalinī-bījam) because such type of reading is not only non-agamic but even otherwise conveys incoherent meaning and involves improper diction.[6] One may hold with reasonable confidence that there were certain uncertainties about the text of the Tantrāloka during the time of Jayaratha. It is why he sometimes suggests equally good alternative readings. Thus the printed text e.g., शिवदहनकिरणजालैदाह्यत्वात् सा यतोऽन्यरूपैव (T.A. 9.207)

may also be read as—

विज्ञानामृतसरिता प्लाव्यत्वात् सा यतोऽन्यरूपैव

To lend authenticity to his suggestions he cites the authority of the relative scripture (here Śivatanuśāstra).[7] The Tantrāloka's actual text was often a matter of doubt. Jayaratha did finalise his own version wherein he piled up several corrected readings. Displaying a rare scientific attitude he furnishes evidence behind his choice even at the slightest doubt. Thus the reading adopted by him in the T.A. 13.355[1] was not due to his whim, he himself saw it in the old manuscripts not once or twice, but hundred times over.[2] Similarly the text of the SV.T. (4.142), corresponding to the T.A. 15.28, has slightly different reading in the version of Kṣemarāja, target of bitter attack from Jayaratha for deliberate distortions. Jayaratha prefers to ignore the text of Kṣemarāja and preserves the original reading for the sake of propriety having culled support from Abhinavagupta's statement in the Mṛgendrā.[3] Even when the available reading is not defective, he assiduously gropes for a better reading. In the Tantrāloka 15.80[4] he finds the word 'Yad' somewhat vague and proposes 'Iha' as a relatively lucid reading.[5] Jayaratha's critical editing of the Tantrāloka and his handling of the source texts has to be viewed together in a larger perspective so as to be able to evaluate his concerted effort towards keeping the text of the Tantrāloka free from imagination, interpolation and alien material and preserving its faithfulness to the original source literature.

His second editorial function relates to the organisation of the text. For example, the verse 'Jñānahīno' etc.,[1] (now numbered as T.A. 23.25 in the printed edition) was wrongly placed by certain scribes after the verse "Annādidāna" etc.[2] (Ist half of the verse numbered as T.A. 23.23 in the printed edition) which is restored to its regular place by Jayaratha.[3] It appears that Jayaratha is guided by the model handscript on the basis of which he prepared his version of the Tantrāloka. But even in his basic handscript there are certain places which have attracted editorial whetting. The verses as given in the footnote below[4] appear twice in the body of the text as T.A. 37.4-5 and T.A. 37.11-13 (2nd half to 1st half). Though Jayaratha retains the double mention, he clearly advises its precise placement and also reverses the order,[5] besides offering tips for better reading.[6] We come across a similar instance when he suggests that the first half[7] of the T.A. 31.42 in all propriety be placed before the T.A. 31.39 for ensuring coherent construction.[1] Such instances bring his conscientious and ever vigilant self into bold relief. This, however, does not mean that he never succumbs to general weaknesses of the scholars. He does, but very rarely. We find a glimpse of such a lapse in his interpretation of the word 'Anta'[2] forming part of the compound in the T.A. 22.12.[3] Here the use of the words 'Ādi' and 'Anta' in the text obviously limits the options, but Jayaratha looks for an implied meaning convenient to him. But such far-fetched interpretations are very few and far between and in no way undermine his importance.

(III) Methodology

(a) Guiding principles

(i) Conformity to Abhinava, teacher and scripture

Coming to the methodology employed and norms of writing adhered to by Jayaratha we notice that his first guiding principle in taking up an item is its absolute conformity which means it must conform in the first place to the stand of Abhinava—the original author, in the second to the preceptorial stand and in the third to the scriptural view. All the three together, not severally, spell out his idea of adherence to the tradition. While discussing the notion of Karaṇa (T.A. 5.130) he abstains from giving out everything at one place and in so doing leans on Abhinavagupta's authority.[1] Similarly, in final selection out of several options it is the preceptorial injunction that must prevail.[2] Moreover, he never ventures to rely on his imagination and propound a thing unless it is expressly enjoined in the Āgamas.[3] One of the reasons for rejecting the Uddyotakāra's interpretation was his lack of scriptural endorsement.[4] Same is the case with those who propound a different reading from one picked up by him.[5] To him the teaming up of all the three authorities, specially teacher and scripture, is very sacred. Hence, he rejects the alternative readings and resulting explanations since they digress from the authority of the scriptural text and the teacher.[6]

(ii) Thoroughness and authenticity; and
(iii) Absence of fascination for word-by-word comentary: eight key factors

Thoroughness and authenticity, thus, are the twin criteria that he ardently pursues but they do not come in the way of his concise and systematic presentation. That is why he never revels in word-by-word explanation. His staying away, however, from the verbatim commentary is not arbitrary. He is guided by certain norms which he has set for himself. (i) Obvious clarity, (ii) future treatment, (iii) overdetailed discussions are some of the considerations that prevent him from embarking upon word-by-word commentary.[1] (iv) Fear of unnecessary repetition is another factor which he is very much scared of.[2] If the item is of esoteric importance, frequent repetion might cause leakage, or if it is of general importance and has been occasionally discussed, too much repetion will amount to wastage of effort. To the list of his norms he adds two more—(v) relevance or utility and (vi) propriety, which constitute the hallmark of his style characterised by his disdain for (vii) far-fetched imagination and (viii) breach of tradition. Undue extension of the text and irrelevance, however, are the twin factors that frighten him most. He refrains from gathering all the possible interpretations because of these two factors.[3] The same consideration does not allow him to enumerate all the aspects associated with each movement of breath[4] (Cāra) or the total number of days associated with the residents of the five sheaths.[1] Even when he is dwelling upon certain source text, he only picks up the relevant material from here and there insted of reproducing the whole text.[2] The idea behind the whole exercise is that the quoted text must be relevant to the issue under discussion,[3] and at the same time should not make the work bulkier.

(iv) Fear of undue extension and deviation from the original line

The notion of relevance is intertwined with the notion of propriety. Relevance minus propriety does not sound convincing. He, therefore, derives strength from his concern for propriety while he sticks to relevance. At one place, he openly admits it.[4] He remains faithful to this principle throughout and does not counter all the anomalies even when he notices them in the available account of a tradition.[5] One should not, therefore, consider it a defect if Jayaratha does not explain or cite every word of the text.[6] In such an approach, as mentioned earlier, he derives additional strength from his disdain for laboured use of imagination[1] and his almost religious concern for retention of the tradition intact.[2] Obviously it does not mean that he leaves the portions unexplained. Instead, he believes in explaining a thing thoroughly even by supplying/importing a missing word on his own in the interest of consistency. There are several instances that illustrate it.[3] Usually, he first attempts an explanation of words and then gives out essence or gist of Kārikā in his own words.[4] In the case of doubt or necessity to furnish additional explanation he offers alternative explanations[5] and tries to reconcile various ends if there is difference of opinion or confusion—whether deliberate or accidental. As we have already seen lot of it earlier we leave the matters here. He, however, continues to remain unswerving in his commitment to bring out the essence of Abhinavagupta's work,[1] and wherever he leaves out something, the scholars are expected to treat it as unnecessary.

(b) Differences from Abhinava & Deviation from the Original Line

We, thus, see that Jayaratha is extremely faithful to Abhinavagupta and tradition, but he is not a blind follower at all. A person of his calibre and competence can never be. There are occasions, notwithstanding their rarity, when he does not endorse Abhinavagupta's reading or finds the latter's version wanting in certain respects. For example, he raises his finger at the use of word 'Padmagaṁ' by Abhinavagupta.[2] He once again questions Abhinavagupta's reading and suggests a better one.[3] Similarly, when Abhinavagupta embarks upon consideration of various stations or seats (Pīṭhas) from the T.A. 15.83 to 15.97 on the authority of the Niśisañcara Āgama, Jayaratha invites attention of the reader to the portion from the T.A. 15.86 to 15.88[4] and finds the first half of the T.A. 15.86 not only contradictory to the conclusion contained in the second half of the T.A. 15.88 but also devoid of agamic support and therefore asks the reader to simply ignore it.[1] We have already seen in detail how much new material has been introduced by Jayaratha to make the Tantrāloka more understandable and uptodate but never has he deviated from the main stream. The matter thus introduced is invariably either colateral or complementary in nature. But Jayaratha, for once, has deviated from the original line and may not be called so faithful in spite of his resorting to the usual commentatorial gimmic. One of the nine main topics incorporated under Krama system is 'non-utility or irrelevance of the limbs of Yoga' (Yogāṅgānupayogitva).[2] The Yoga which Abhinavagupta seeks to refer to is the eight-limbed Yoga of Patañjali, nowhere alluding to the Ṣaḍaṅga (six-limbed) Yoga at all.[3] Jayaratha, however, takes Ṣaḍaṅga, and not Aṣṭāṅga, as actually belonging to Krama system (Svadarśanoktāni). Then why does Abhinavagupta refer to Patañjali's Yoga? The logic behind Abhinavagupta's enumeration, according to Jayaratha, is that though the former subscribes to Ṣaḍaṅga theory, he wants to convey the upper limit of the number of the yogic limbs.[1] However, Jayaratha's deviation is too transparent to fool anybody. Why does he do so? There may be two possible reasons. Either he is under the spell of Buddhist tantricists who propogated the six-limbed Yoga and is out to wean the people away from them to his path or he inherits a Krama tradition different from Abhinavagupta's which enjoined Ṣaḍaṅga Yoga. It is interesting to note that Jayaratha nowhere tries to define the six limbs and quotes an unidentified source only once to enumerate them.[2] Although it is an interesting episode of Krama history we do not intend to pursue it further because our interest is limited to exploring the inter se relationship between Jayaratha and his master.[3]

CHAPTER IV

ABOUT THE TEXT

(I) KSTS Edition: editorial and printing lapses

The Tantrāloka is a very voluminous work of Abhinavagupta and togetherwith Jayaratha's commentary covers twelve volumes in bold print brought out in the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies spread over 3718 pages.[1] The Tantrāloka, as printed, comprises roughly 6000 verses, 5844 1/2 to be exact. The fact that two verses, T.A. 37.4-5, have been repeated as T.A. 37.10 1/2-12 1/2 does not reduce the number because this anomaly is a legacy from the time of Jayaratha himself having been retained in his script itself. The sum total of the printed verse-numbers at 5842, therefore, does not give the correct picture because of several printing mistakes and editorial lapses resulting in occasional duplication and omission of numbers as well as treatment of half-verses as full ones. An effort has been made to assemble all such cases in the chart given below to offer a tabular view.

1. If we go by the printed numbering of the pages the total rises to 3721, but the page No. 308 in the 3rd volume, page No. 92 in the 7th volume (between 11th and 12th Āhnikas) and page No. 128 in the 10th volume are blank. The text of the new edition has 3725 pages spread over six volumes (vols 2-7) with seven intervening pages left blank (925, 1088, 1292, 2184, 2440, 2726, 2854). Thus the actual number of pages tallies at 3718.

(a) Two types of textual anarchisms

Coming to the KSTS edition of which the MLBD[1] edition is a reprint, we find that it requires a through critical editing. It suffers from two types of textual anarchisms—(i) those which were confronted by Jayaratha and have been taken care of in the course of our treatment of his and which offer really serious problems of textual reconstruction and (ii) others which concern editing and printing errors which are not so serious but often create misleading situations. It is the latter we propose to look into briefly for the present.

(b) Basic MSS of the KSTS edition

In the absence of any editorial note or preface we have practically no idea about the MSS on which this edition is based. From the occasional footnotes, however, Mukund Ram Shastri, the editor, seems to have consulted four MSS which have been referred to by Nāgarī letters Ka, Kha and Ga plus one on which rests the text and which has not been indicated by any letter.[2] Out of the remaining MSS the Ga manuscript seems to be most complete as several missing portions have been filled only with the aid of this MS.[3] Notwithstanding our ignorance about

1. Motilal Banarsidass

2. It is equally probable to think that there were only three MSS from which the model MS was prepared by M.R. Shastri. Whatever the case it does not alter the position much.

(Ibid., p. 179.) etc. etc.

the principles employed in finalization of the printed text the sustained and patient labour put in by the editor and his team of Panditas is easily visible with the result that a largely readable and complete text of an important treatise is in our hands.[1] Besides determining the acceptable readings and pointing out the respective variants, the editor has also corrected the patently corrupt readings.[2] Of course it is not a very frequent activi..y. It appears that the text of the Āhnikas from first to thirteen was more corrupt than the later ones as the profusion and frequency of foot-notes suggest. Even among the initial Āhnikas the Ist was most defective and the incidence of mistakes has been gradually on the declining scale in the sub-sequent ones. From 14th onwards footnotes become conspicuous by their absence. At some places he offers interpretive comments,[3] but he does so very rarely. Wherever feasible, the editor has tried to trace the portions of the cited text to its published edition, if available. Although he is not absolutely regular on this score, his efforts have proved quite helpful. For example, he has tried to identify Jayaratha's citations from the SV.T. in the printed edition and at times has even pointed out to the variations, if any.[1] Out of the twelve volumes he has appended a verse-index to six from 3rd to 8th and has also purveyed citation-index in the 3rd and 6th volumes.

(c) PRINTING MISTAKES

It will not be out of place to refer the reader to the patently glaring printing mistakes in the printed edition. Some of which may be sampled as below—

(i) T.A. 19 reads श्रदृष्टप्रकटीकुर्मो for अदृष्टं प्रकटीकुर्मो
(ii) T.A. 1.291 reads समुच्चारश्चिदात्मता for समुच्चारश्चिदात्मनो[2]
(iii) T.A. 1.298 reads संख्याधिक्यं for सांख्याधिक्यम्[3]
(i.e., सांख्याद् आधिक्यम्)
(iv) T.A. 1.301 reads स्थानभित् for स्नानभित्[4]
(v) T.A. 1.302 reads द्रव्ययोग्यमर्चा for द्रव्ययोग्यत्वमर्चा[5]
(vi) T.A. 1.312 reads कलावेक्षा for कालापेक्षा[6]
(vii) T.A. 1.316 reads परीक्षाचार्यंकरणं for परीक्ष्याचार्यंकरणम्[7]
(viii) T.A. 1.324 reads बोध: for वेध:[8]
(ix) T.A. 37.75 reads भ्रातापि तस्या: for भर्तापि तस्या:[9]
(x) T.A.V., IV, p..1495 reads सर्वत्र पूर्वशास्त्रप्रक्रियया for सर्वत्र श्रीपूर्वशास्त्रप्रक्रियया

1. श्रीस्वच्छन्दे तु लवणोदधिमित्यस्यानन्तरं .... इत्यधिक: पाठ: ।
T.A.V., IV, p. 1407, fn. 1

2. This reading becomes clear when construed with reference to its proper place of treatment in the 5th Āhnika, specially T.A. 5.62.

3. Cp. T.A. 13.3

4. Cp. ibid. 15.38

5. Cp. ibid. 15.160 and 15.180

6. Cp. ibid. 19.7

7. Cp. ibid. 23.2

8. Cp. ibid. 29.169

9. Retention of such readings creates historical anomalies.

These printing mistakes are such as to give wrong idea of the subject matter proposed to be discussed in the Tantrāloka. There are others which are quite obvious but do not injure the spirit of the text. Some instances may be sampled as under—

(i) T.A.V., III, p. 776 reads भ्रोयोपरञ्जनं for मेयोपरंजनम्
(ii) T.A. 4.271 reads न तस्य च निषोधो for न तस्य च निषेधो
(iii) T.A.V., III, p. 1291 reads लब्धसिद्धींति for लब्धसिद्धिरिति
(iv) T.A. 7.63 reads स स्पदे खे for स स्पन्दे खे
(v) T.A.V., V, p. 2201 reads अधिकारभेदम् उपदिष्टं for अधिकारभेद उपदिष्टः
(vi) T.A.V., V, p. 2286 reads मतादीनां तत्त्वं for मलादीनां तत्त्वं
(vii) T.A.V., VI, p. 2484 reads यदीति स्थाने for यदिति स्थाने
(viii) T.A.V., VI, p. 2488 reads ज्ञेयसंकल्पनारूपम् for ज्ञेयं संकल्पनारूपम् (T.A. 15.86)
(ix) T.A. 29.255 reads वेदं गुरवो रहस्यविदः for वेधं गुरवो रहस्यविदः
(x) 37.72 reads परिहारमथो चिकीर्षंन for परिहारमथ चिकीर्षंन्

In the case of certain readings the problem is complicated when the MSS under reference do not have other variants than the printed one and the same text is retained in the Tantrāloka and the Tantrāloka-viveka both. For instance the T.A. 1.264 reads Lakṣyaṁ which is retained by Jayaratha in his Viveka. It, however, must be Lakṣaṇaṁ if a coherent meaning is to be derived. Sometimes one comes across a very interesting phenomenon. The editor retains चन्द्रिकाशांततापसः in the T.A. 10.287 whereas in the Viveka

(Vol. II, p. 236) he adopts चन्द्रिकापास्ततामसः while referring to the same verse. It is, therefore, apparent that the required editorial vigilance has been wanting and as a result the two portions were never coordinated, as it were.

(d) NUMBERING ERRORS

Besides printing, there is a variety of numbering errors. The simplest one is that of printing error. For instance, commentary on the T.A. 8.285 is printed as 8.281. Similarly, while the commentary is marked as relating to the T.A. 1.58 the verse bearing number 1.58 is not indicated. Another anomaly that is visible from the chart appearing on pp. 156-159 is that several verses have been left unnumbered. For example, the half-verse between T.A. 37.32 and T.A. 37.33 has been left unnumbered. Such instances are many and they have been duly shown in the table. This has made the problem of correct serialization more chaotic. While considering the style of Abhinavagupta we noted that he has adopted a style in which each preceding Āhnika ends with the first half of the concluding verse and the succeeding one begins with the latter half. This is what has been termed as Saṁcayanyāya by Jayaratha. In such an event there could have been one of the two editorial choices—to treat the verses as always marking either the chaptorial conclusions or the beginnings and number them accordingly. But the editorial practice has not been uniform in this regard. In some Āhnikas last verse has been treated as the concluding verse and has been numbered accordingly leaving the remaining half unnumbered as has been done in the 17th Āhnika. In some other Āhnikas this practice has been abandoned. The first concluding half has not been marked, instead the next commencing verse has been given a number, as has been the practice in the 16th Āhnika. Another anomaly that is very conspicuous is that quite often the concluding half and the introductory half both have been marked as two full independent verses. For example Āhnikas 7-8, 12-13, 19-20, 21-22, 25-26 and 30-31 may be taken up. Another prevailing anarchy consists in not providing any number to such verses. This is evident from a perusal of the Āhnikas 28-29, 29-30, 32-33 and 33-34. An interesting aspect of such anarchous behaviour has resulted in one half being treated as one verse while the other half being conjoined with another and made part of it. This is very well illustrated by Āhnikas 16-17, where the concluding verse is numbered as 16.311 while the introductory half is merged with the first half of the second verse (17.2) and numbered as 17.1. Similar thing seems to have happened in the 13-14th Āhnikas also. The same practice has been reversed elsewhere, i.e. the last half has been fused with the penultimate verse making it appear as one full verse. For example, the T.A. 8.452, being the concluding one, should have been half and numbered either as 8.453 or as 9.1, but it is not so as it has been assimilated with the preceding half, i.e. T.A. 8.452 and allotted its number. Sometimes the concluding as well as the introductory verses both have not been numbered at all, as has happened in the Āhnikas 34-35. From these illustrations one gets a fairly adequate idea of the discrepansies abounding in the whole of the KSTS edition and the scope of improvements to be effected.

Lack of a uniform editorial policy coupled with printing errors has spread to the other areas of the text. When it relates to internal references by the Viveka, the quoted numbers differ from the actual ones. For instance, the quoted verse shown as T.A. 9.244 is in fact T.A. 9.246. The same thing has been frequently repeated. Following are some such instances—

(i) T.A.V., IV, p. 1814 quotes T.A. 8.260 but numbers it as 8.255.

(ii) T.A.V., IV, p. 1813 quotes T.A. 8.253-260 but numbers it as 8.248-258.

(iii) T.A.V., V, p. 2280 quotes T.A. 13.256 but numbers it as 13.252.

The problem is compounded when we notice that the reference appearing in the T.A.V., III, p.1059 are not found in the Tantrāloka under the given numbers and one quotation which the editor shows as constituting the Tantrāloka 25.172 is found at variance with Jayaratha's statement who takes it as from the 29th Āhnika (i.e., T.A. 29.182).

Apart from these, there are some serious lacuna leading to interesting conclusions. For example, the colophon of the 17th Āhnika reading Vikṣipta Dīkṣā has led to the naming of the Āhnika as Vikṣiptadīkṣāprakāśana. It is only by examining the contents of the Āhnika we come to know that the reading in all probability should have been Vistṛtadīkṣā,[1] and discover how funny the reading is.

1. Jayaratha in his commentary on the last verse of the 17th Āhnika says that जननादिसमन्विता दीक्षा in the text means विस्तृता दीक्षा, while in the 2nd half of the same verse (T.A. 18.1) Abhinavagupta proposes to discuss संक्षिप्तदीक्षा.

Similarly a uniform practice in respect of pagination is also wanting. While there is continuous pagination in all the volumes irrespective of the number of Āhnikas contained therein, some of the volumes, notably Vth and XIth, have Āhnika-wise pagination. Likewise all the volumes have fresh pagination, but volume XII continues it from volume XI.[1]

On all counts, thus, the greatest single handicap seems to be the absence of critical textual editing and uniform editorial practice.

(II) Metres employed

The Tantrāloka is a versicular text like most Sanskrit works and though Abhinavagupta displays his poetic skill occasionally his main occupation is scholastic treatment. He seems to be quite at home in employment of a variety of metres and the following appear to be his favourite choice—Nardataka,[2] Anuṣṭup[3], Upendravajrā,[4] Vasantatilakā,[5] Āryā,[6] Rathoddhatā,[7] Sragdharā,[8] Mandākrāntā[9], Śārdūlavikrīḍita[10], Indravajrā[11], Sikhariṇī[12], Drutavilambita,[13]

1. This discrepancy does not exist in the new edition because of the running pagination in all the volumes.

Vaṁśastha[1], Pṛthvī[2] and Mālinī[3]. While he casts the Tantrāloka mostly in the traditional Anuṣṭup metre he seems to be quite fond of Āryā and Vasantatilakā also.

(III) Topical organization and structural analysis

(a) Division into Āhnikas

The whole Tantrāloka is divided into 37 Āhnikas (lit. daily lessons). Although at one place Abhinavagupta seems to use the word in its literal sense,[4] it usually stands for a chapter or section if the gross variation in the size of Āhnikas indicates anything. The fifteenth is the biggest Āhnika containing 612 verses and the thirtyfourth the smallest comprising just 4 verses. All other Āhnikas fall within these two extremes. The following exercise may be of some help in getting at the structural analysis of the Tantrāloka—

Number of verses	Āhnikas
(1) 451 and above	8, 9, 15
(2) 301 to 450	1, 10, 13, 16, 28
(3) 101 to 300	3, 4, 5, 6, 11, 17, 23, 29, 30, 31
(4) 51-100	7, 19, 21, 26, 27, 32, 37
(5) 1 to 50	2, 12, 14, 18, 20, 22, 24, 25, 33, 34, 35, 36

1. T.A. 3.39
2. Ibid. 12.26
3. Ibid. 28.367
4. इत्यनुत्तरपदप्रविकासे शाक्तमौपयिकमद्य विविक्तम् ।
Concluding verse after T.A. 4.278.
Jayaratha adds अद्य इत्यनेन आह्निकशब्दार्थस्तात्त्विकः इति प्रकाशितम् ।
T.A.V., III, p. 923

The table pictures a very wide range. Although no clear cut guideline behind such a yawning gap is discernible, the nature of the subjectmatter to be treated seems to be the only answer. A feeble pattern, however, emerges in as much as the first half has claimed the larger slice of bigger chapters, whereas the second half abounds in the smaller ones. It is significant to note that while the earlier half is marked by preponderance of the theoritical discussion, the second by predominance of the procedural treatment.

(b) THREE DEVICES TO INDICATE SUBJECTMATTER .

A welcome feature is that Abhinava has taken care to provide titles to all the Āhnikas focussing on their main subject matter. He utilizes three opportunities to ventilate his mind. He tries to entitle the chapters towards the end of the first Āhnika from verses 278 to 286 while discussing general topics and from verses 287 to 328 while discussing specific auxiliary topics. This is in the first place. He mentions the precise prospective contents in the introductory as well as the concluding verse in such a way as to give a definite name to the Āhnika under reference.[1] This is in the second place. While cross-

1. This is the standard practice with Abhinavagupta and his prologue and epilogue usually correspond to one another. He, however, gives up this practice in the sixth Āhnika where he initially promises to discuss Sthānaprakalpa as part of the external means called Āṇava, but ends up with the discussion on Kālatattva. Such a phenomenon, however, does not constitute a serious lapse or deviation because Sthānaprakalpa is a broader theme which includes the notion of Kālatattva.[b]

a. स्थानप्रकल्पाख्यतया स्फुटस्तु बाह्योऽभ्युपायः प्रविविच्यतेऽथ ।

referring to the contents of another Āhnika he occasionally, though not necessarily, alludes to the Āhnika in question by name. For instance, in the thirteenth Āhnika he refers to Liṅgoddhāradīkṣā which is the subject matter of the 22nd Āhnika[1] and to Dīkṣāprastāva[2] which occupies the 14th Āhnika or in the 9th Āhnika he refers to future Sadyonirvāṇadīkṣā[3] which is the main theme of the 19th Āhnika. Likewise, he refers to the 13th Āhnika by name in the 1st Āhnika.[4] Jayartha closely follows his master and provides captions to all the Āhnikas in the chapterwise colophons. The two colophons, however, relating to the 34th and 37th Āhnikas do not record any name. Jayaratha's titles are invariably followed by the word 'Prakāśana'. It lends credence to the view that Jayaratha perhaps preferred 'Prakāsa' to 'Viveka' as title for his commentary. Normally Jayaratha's nomenclatures echo those of Abhinavagupta but there have been some exceptions as well. This has happened in respect of the 16th and 17th Āhnikas. According to Abhinavagupta the 16th Āhinka dwells upon Putrakadīkṣā, but Jayaratha christens it as Prameyaprakāśana (revealing the subjectmatter) which, in a sense, is of no consequence. Similarly, the 17th, according to Abhinavagupta, focusses on Jananādisamanvitādīkṣā, but Jayaratha names it as Vistṛta-dīksā-prakāśana (Viksiptadīksā in the printed text which is wrong as already discussed elsewhere) in contrast to the 18th Āhnika which incorporates Saṁksiptadīksā. In some places, notwithstanding Jayaratha's total dependence on Abhinava, his nomenclatures are somewhat less communicative or slightly wanting, if one may say so. For example, Abhinava designs the 19th Āhnika as discussing Sadyaḥ-samutkrāntipradā Dīkṣā while Jayaratha names it as Sadya-utkrānti-prakāśana (lit., revealing sudden death). In fact, Jayaratha adopts such a practice from here right upto the 25th Āhnika. Perhaps for the sake of brevity, he prefers dropping 'Dīksā' or 'Vidhi' as the case may be.

(c) Division of Āhnikas into groups

Abhinavagupta broadly divides all the 37 Āhnikas into two groups. First thirtytwo Āhnikas except the first constitute one set and the remaining five, from 33rd to 37th, constitute the other. Their basic difference lies in the fact that while the first set dilates upon both—general as well as ancillary topics, the second set has no ancillary material to fall back upon. This also provides one of the reasons for the smaller size of the later Āhnikas. As we have already seen, Abhinavagupta directs all energies to nurture the Tantrāloka as a Śāstra. A scripture worth the name must have three essential parts—(i) topic or proposition to be enquired into, (ii) definition and (iii) examination (Uddeśa, Laksana and Parīksā) respectively. Uddeśa is nothing but an averment of the topic by name which normally takes the form of question-answer between the teacher and the taught.[1] In fact this imparts tantric semblance to the tantric texts.[2] Lakṣaṇa consists in deciphering the distinctive character of the thing and Parīksā marks the total view which emerges after a thorough scrutiny of all the opposite positions.[3] From this angle he attempts a second classification of Āhnikas. As such, he devotes the first Āhnika to the positing of Uddeśas while other Āhnikas, from two to thirtyseven, focus on Laksana and Parīkṣā both. Here again, as pointed out earlier, in his treatment of Uddeśas he underlines two categories of topics—general as well as ancillary—and discusses them from T.A. 1.278 to 1.284 and from T.A. 1.286 to 1.326 respectively. He has coined a special nomenclature as Pūrvaja (lit. anterior) and Anuja (posterior) standing for Sāmānya and Viśeṣa—in that order.[4] As we pointed out towards the beginning of this paragraph, thirtyone Āhnikas, from 2 to 32, define and examine general and ancillary topics both, while Āhnikas from 33 to 37 define and examine general topics alone.

(d) Demarcation of the primary and secondary topics

We are highly indebted to Abhinavagupta for enumeration of the primary and secondary topics he touches upon in course of his treatment. Jayaratha, his dedicated commentator, takes upon himself to demarcate as to where an ancillary topic begins and where another takes over. Yet there are places where Jayaratha does not give any direct indication. As a result precise positioning has been a difficult task in such cases. An effort, however, has been made to demarcate the precise places of all the ancillary topics dealt with in the Tantrāloka in the chart below indicating the items.

Even a cursory perusal of the above chart indicates that Abhinavagupta has been very thorough and exact in the handling of his treatise. Yet there seem to have happened certain modifications to his original scheme as we proceed with the actual treatment. As usual Jayaratha is a great help at such places. According to Abhinavagupta the ancillary topics under Āṇavopāya (Vth Āhnika) are seven in number. While subscribing to the scheme of Abhinavagupta, Jayaratha suggests that these seven items may be easily grouped under four Prameyas (topics) namely Uccāra, Dhyāna, Karana and Varna. However, after the fourth Prameya or ancillary topic as discussed in the 5th Āhnika, Abhinavagupta undertakes to discuss the 5th Prameya called Sthānaprakalpa[1] in the sixth Āhnika which also focusses on other aspects of Āṇavopāya.

In the 7th Āhnika, the second ancillary topic i.e., Mantravidyābheda, is purportedly treated as one topic by Abhinavagupta while Mantra and Vidyā both have to be taken separately and understood, consequently, as Mantracakrabheda and Vidyācakrabheda. In the 8th Āhnika the original order of the 2nd and 3rd ancillary items as outlined in the prefatory remark[2] has been reversed in the course of treatment. Thus the 2nd topic, Purasaṁgraha, commences at T.A. 8.406 while the third, Tattvayojanā, at T.A. 8.204. Perhaps the reason was Abhinavagupta's desire to treat the 1st and 3rd topics in detail and the 2nd in brief.[1]

Coming to the 10th Āhnika one notices that the declared focus of the chapter is on the subdivisions of categories (Tattvabhedavidhi), but Abhinavagupta in the same sequence enters into an elaborate discussion on the subdivisions of regions (Bhuvanabhedavidhi, commencing at T.A. 10.151) without openly enlarging the scope of the chapter. Moreover, the fourth ancillary topic, variety of knowing subjects (Pramātṛabheda), finds a specific mention in the prefatory enumeration of ancillary items[2], yet it has not been taken up for a separate treatment by Abhinavagupta later. Jayaratha has tried to justify it as a deliberate omission since subjective variety is inherent in all the preceding sub-topics.[3] Next comes consideration of the twin cosmic passages called word-passage and meaning-passage (Śabdādhvan and Arthādhvan). The former consists of Bhuvana, Tattva and Kalā; and the latter of Varṇa, Pada and Mantra. Abhinavagupta devotes five full chapters and a part of the sixth chapter to the treatment of passage of meaning (Arthādhvan) whereas he spares only part of one chapter i.e., 11th (in addition to certain occasional references in the 6th and 7th Āhnikas), which is avowedly devoted to the treatment of the subpassage of Kalā (one of the three sub-passages constituting Arthādhvan), for the treatment of Śabdādhvan. All the three sub-passages of word namely Varṇādhvan, Padādhvan and Mantrādhvan have been subsumed under the third ancillary item called Varṇabhedakrama commencing at the T.A. 11.43. The subsequent Āhnikas till 14th do not call for any comment. In the 15th Āhnika two things attract our attention. One, the 28th ancillary topic is introduced as Sāmaya Karma by Jayaratha,[1] while Abhinavagupta takes it as Sāmaya Karma relating to sleep[2]. Two, Āhnikas from 15th to 27th form a cluster dealing with daily rites (Nityakarma) whereas the 28th deals with occasional rites (Naimittikakarma). However, the colophon of the 15th Āhnika in Jayaratha's commentary also hints at inclusion of Naimittika in the 15th.[3] If our understanding of the text is adequate, it offers a fit case for future investigation as to how Naimittika could prematurely creep in at this point. Similarly the tenth ancillary issue in the 16th Āhnika i.e., Mantrasattāprayojanam is a bit confusing. From the prefatory remark[4] it looks like single item meaning 'purpose of the existence of Mantra' whereas in treatment it actually has twin elements, the phrase meaning "existence and purpose of Mantra".[5] In a sense, two simple ancillary issues instead of one complex item would have been far better. But Abhinavagupta prefers it that way.

As we march ahead we are further confronted with deviations from the original scheme. The 20th Āhnika is titled as Tulādīkṣāprakāśana which actually constitutes the 3rd ancillary topic as envisaged in the prefatory verse.[1] In this verse Antaḥsaṁskāra figures as the 2nd ancillary theme. Abhinavagupta, however, reverses the order during treatment and discusses Tulāvidhi first and Antahsamskāra later. Jayaratha takes due congnizance of this drift.[2] We come across a slightly different phenomenon in the 21st Āhnika. Abhinavagupta talks of four ancillary topics under this Āhnika in his prefatory remarks[3], but Jayaratha seems to have dropped the 3rd item namely Saṁskriyāgaṇa. In his view the fourth item, Balābalavicāra, immediately follows the 2nd i.e., Jālopadeśa.[4] Perhaps this is the reason Jayaratha does not indicate the beginning of the 3rd ancillary theme. Sometimes Jayaratha adds certain ancillary item not provided for by Abhinavagupta originally. In the 28th Āhnika Jayaratha suggests inclusion of Pavitrakavidhi after Cakrārcana (the 6th Anujoddeśa)[5] and Tīrthāyatanacarcā after Mṛtiparīkṣā (the 8th Anuja). According to Jayaratha, Tīrthāyatanacarcā should have followed the discussion on Pavitrakavidhi but since its usefulness is linked with death, its consideration after Mṛtiparīkṣā is only proper.[1] Now both of these suggested ancillary items do not figure in the opening list of Abhinavagupta.[2] In that case Pavitrakavidhi should have commenced at T.A. 28.112 and Tīrthāyatanacarcā at 28.247. Abhinavagupta's own style occasionally seems quite complicated. He proclaims to have dedicated the 30th Āhnika to the treatment of Mantras and accordingly he decides on two suitable ancillaries namely Mantrasvarūpa and Mantravīrya. Jayaratha dittoes it by naming the Āhnika as Mantrādiprakāśana. Abhinavagupta himself observes in his concluding remark that he has dealt not only with Mantra but also with Vidyā (i.e. Brahmavidyā) in the 30th Āhnika yet he does not devise any independent Anuja to earmark discussion on Vidyā. It is difficult to say at this stage if Vidyā constitutes another ancillary item, but if at all it does, it should commence with T.A. 30.62.

(f) Three broad divisions of the text and other schematisation by Jayaratha

Jayaratha offers several insights into the scheme and contents of the Tantrāloka from various angles. From one such clue[3] we infer that he visualizes three

1. यद्यपि च अत्र पवित्रकविध्यनन्तरं तीर्थायतनचर्चनमुद्दिष्टं तथापि तत् मरणोपयोगित्वात् तत्परीक्षान्तरुपक्षिप्तमिति न कश्चित् पूर्वापरव्याघातः।
T.A.V., VII, p. 3203
2. T.A. 1.320-323
3. Commenting on the T.A. 6.1 he observes—अथ शब्दोऽधिकारे। तेन इतः प्रभृति आद्वादशाह्निकं यत्किंचिदुच्यते तत्सर्वं स्थानकल्पनाधिकारेण, इति पञ्चदशाह्निकात् प्रभृति पुनरेतदेव बाह्यस्थण्डिल-broad divisions of the text, one dealing with the general issues, the other with Upāyas and the remaining with the specific notion of Sthānaprakalpa (a sub-concept under Āṇava-upāya meaning devising or allotting places). The first group consists of the 1st, 13th and 14th Āhnikas dealing with the varieties of knowledge, descent of grace and process of initiation respectively. The second group includes Āhnikas from 2nd to 5th pertaining to specific Upāyas. The third group comprises Āhnikas from 6th to 12th and from 15th to 37th. By far this is the largest group. This does not amount to say that these Āhnikas have nothing else to discuss. It simply means that Sthānaprakalpa sets their predominant undertone. Even here it may, however, be remembered that Āhnikas from 6th to 12th are directly addressed to this item. It merely implies that the discussion on the doctrine of six passages (Ṣaḍadhva) is essentially an offshoot of the doctrine of Sthānaprakalpa which again is a corollary of Āṇavopāya. Although it is not feasible at the moment, for reasons of space, to dilate upon the concept of Sthāna, it may be stated that Sthāna has three varieties—Prāṇa (breath), Deha (body) and Bahiḥ (exterior). Prāṇa is fivefold—Prāṇa, Apāna, Samāna, Udāna and Vyāna. Deha is twofold—internal and external. And Bāhya has eleven varieties in the main—Maṇḍala, Sthaṇḍila, Pātra, Akṣasūtra, Pustaka, Liṅga, Tūra, Paṭa, Pusta, Pratimā and Though here Jayaratha is quite silent about the contents of the 1st five Āhnikas and also about those of intervening Āhnikas between 12th and 15th, the conclusions drawn above will not appear incoherent when viewed in totality of Jayaratha's treatment.

Mūrti to the exclusion of innumerable sub-varieties. Though Ṣadadhva is primarily related to Prāṇavidhi, it encompasses other varieties of Sthāna as well. Perusing through the pages of the Tantrāloka one will easily see the logic behind Jayaratha's statement that Sthānaprakalpa constitutes the main undercurrent of almost all the Āhnikas after the 6th excepting the 13th and 14th. This is borne out by two additional factors. One is Jayaratha's observation[1] on the T.A. 5.157[2] and other happens to be Abhinavagupta's devising of Sthānaprakalpa as the 2nd ancillary topic (commencing at T.A. 15.80) in the 15th Āhnika assigned to Samayadīkṣā where he covers the concepts of Pīṭha, Ardhapītha, Upapīṭha, Sandohaka, Ksetrāṣṭaka, Upakṣetrāṣṭaka etc. These are the items that specially engage our attention in the 29th Āhnika specially from verses 29 to 95. Thus it may be contended that under the overall Sthānaprakalpa-scheme Āhnikas from 6 to 12 are linked with various phases of Ṣaḍadhva and Āṇava Upāya, 15 to 27 are connected with Nityakarma (daily rites) and 28 to 29[3] deal with Naimittikakarma (occasional rites).

Sometimes Jayaratha does not envisage an overall schematisation, but organises the different Āhnikas, devoted to a continued or connected theme, into a loose whole. He, accordingly, unearths an underlying relationship between the 6th, 13th and 14th Āhnikas from the point of view of the five Godly functions. Jayaratha points out that in the course of Saṁhāracitratānirūpaṇa (lit., discussion on the variety of withdrawal or dissolution—3rd ancillary topic in the 6th Āhnika) Abhinava takes up Sṛṣṭi, Sthiti and Saṁhāra (creation, sustenance and withdrawal); in the course of Śaktipāta (descent of grace—13th Āhnika) he deals with Anugraha (grace); and in the course of Dīkṣopakrama (commencement of initiation—14th Āhnika) Abhinavagupta undertakes to discuss Tirobhāva (disappearance).[1]

Likewise Jayaratha once again discovers the thematic unity characterising the four Āhnikas from 29th to 32nd. In the Kula system, according to Jayaratha, a scripture consists of four seats e.g., Vidyā, Mantra, Mudrā and Maṇḍala.[2] He no doubt bases his stand on Abhinavagupta's authority. According to Jayaratha, while the 29th deals summarily with all the four seats, the 30th deals with Vidyā alias Brahmavidyā and Mantra,[3] the 31st with Maṇḍala[4] and 32nd with Mudrā.[5] Together they constitute worship according to the Kula process or Kula system.[6]

(g) Non-organisation of the Tantrāloka into Jñāna, Yoga, Kriyā and Caryā

A striking feature one is not likely to miss is the absence of any division or organisation of the Tantrāloka's subject matter on the traditional tantric pattern of Jñāna, Yoga, Kriyā and Caryā. In the opinion of B.V. Dwivedi (as per one of our conversations) Jñāna-Yoga-Kriyā-Caryā division seems to be an old-time phenomenon losing considerable ground in the later era. Even in the later tantric texts proper there are broadly two divisions—Jñāna and Kriyā, the latter incorporating Yoga and Caryā as well. The problem constitutes an important facet of the tantric historiology, but we refrain from delving deep into it for the time being. It must, however, be said that Abhinavagupta seems to be quite conversant with this division and his occasional references will bear ample testimony to it. For example, in the 16th Āhnika he examines the role of Jñāna vis-á-vis Yoga and Dīkṣā and explores their inter se relationship.[1] Ābhinavagupta has devoted one of the several chapters dwelling upon Naimittika vidhi i.e., the 25th Āhnika, to the theme of Śrāddha (post-funeral rites performed in honour of the departed) as leading to enjoyment and emancipation both. Now this Śrāddha is essentially a Caryā phenomenon whose efficacy has been established on the basis of its deriving sustenance from Bhakti.[2] One of the apparent reasons for not adopting the Jñāna-yoga-kriyā-caryā pattern lies in the synthetic approach of Abhinavagupta which is manifested in two ways. In one, all the four form a harmonious whole that culminates into Jñāna. It is why Abhinavagupta devotes his opening Āhnika to Jñāna and its varieties. In other, all the three except Jñāna originate from the relatively weeker and feebler descent of grace leading[1] to the rise of different Sādhakas.

IV Cross-references: a collateral source of thematic organisation

As already advised earlier in this chapter[2], one very rich source of our understanding the contents of the Tantrāloka consists in the cross-references to various Āhnikas and their subjectmatter as appearing in both Abhinavagupta and Jayaratha. This also constitutes a fair basis for the cross-checking of the contents as furnished by Abhinavagupta in his enumeration. A note of caution, however, must be sounded here. Major and minor or primary and secondary items do not indicate the primary and secondary issues as such in the respective Āhnikas. They have been so termed on the basis of their direct and indirect allusions respectively. But on the whole they subscribe to the original scheme of Abhinavagupta. By collating and collecting such references we get the following picture about the contents of various Āhnikas.[1]

(a) FIRST ĀHNIKA

The issues discussed are—

(i) Free will leads to manifold manifestation of the unitary principle without, while retaining its unitary character.[2]

(ii) Variety of Upāyas (redemptive knowledge as a means).[3] It includes the discussion on hierarchical gradation in between Upāyas where out of the four Upāyas (namely Āṇava, Śākta, Śāmbhava and Anupāya) each preceding leads to and culminates into each succeeding.[4]

> This view has been echoed in the 4th Āhnika as is clear from the footnote 4 below. In the 13th Āhnika also the view is reiterated.[5]

(iv) Fifty varieties of Samāveśa (complete immersion).[2]

This aspect has a special bearing on the 3rd and 9th Āhnikas, as we shall see in their respective places.

(v) Theory of ignorance (Mala).[3] Ignorance is nothing but a phase of self-dynamism.

The doctrine of Mala forms a special feature of the 9th and 13th Āhnikas, as we shall see later.

(vi) The ultimate is of the nature of self-luminosity and so is ensuing plurality.[4]

(vii) Means of cognition derive their subsistence from cognizer.[5]

(viii) Plurality of Dīksā is due to gradual unfoldment of self-consciousness with the necessary implication that even the most inert is essentially divine.[1]

This view has been enlarged upon in the 16th Āhnika.

(ix) As against the popular notion that Siddhi is attained through observance of time, place and vows etc., it is the feeling of identity with the external objects and reflecting upon them as essentially one with I-consciousness that leads to self-realization. This phenomenon has been termed as Grāmadharma-vṛtti.[2]

The 29th Āhnika makes special use of this view in identifying the spritual seat and its presiding powers with I-consciousness.

is inform in the sense that they display the aspects of cosmic dynamism.[1]

The 33rd Āhnika is devoted to the development of this theme.

(b) SECOND ĀHNIKA

(i) There is no Upāyopeyabhāva in Anupāya.[2] Hence the problem of bondage and freedom therefrom has no room here.

(ii) Compassion for others is the sole motive force behind the activity of a Sāṁsiddhika (self-accomplished) teacher.[3]

(iii) Dīkṣā (initiation) practically has no role in the context of Anupāya because of the speediest descent of grace.[4]

(iv) Likewise, in Turyātīta (i.e., beyond the fourth) state (which is identical with Anupāya state) there is complete absence of Yoga.[1]

(c) THIRD ĀHNIKA

(i) The notion of Jīvanmukti (emancipation during life-time) becomes meaningful only in relation to Upāyas beginning with Śāmbhava to Āṇava.[2]

(ii) Śāmbhava marks the culminating point of the hierarchy of Upāyas characterized by the vibration of consciousness emanating from object (Artha) up to Prāṇa.[3]

(iii) Twofold purity of consciousness—primary and secondary.[4]

(iv) The three short vowels A, I, U represent three powers of Bhairava e.g., Parā, Parāparā and Aparā that constitute the primary triad (Trika).[5]

(vi) A as Visarga and Aṁ as Vindu together constitute Kuleśa and Kuleśvarī (male and female presiding authority of Kula).[2]

These and other allied ideas are again discussed in the 5th Āhnika.

(vii) Rāva (sound) is tenfold.[3]

This is also taken up in detail in the 6th and 33rd Āhnikas.

The subordinate topics, which otherwise constitute major topics in the other Āhnikas, discussed here include—

(1) Twelve Kālikās (IVth Āhnika),
(2) inclusion of 81 letters in 50 letters (6th Āhnika),
(3) absence of the hierarchy of Upāyas in Anupāya (2nd Āh.), and
(4) 50 varieties of Samāveśa (9th Āhnika).

(d) Fourth Āhnika

(i) Twelvefold rise of the ultimate principle called Parama Śiva and manifold appurtenant doctrines.[2] These twelve manifestations technically go by the name of twelve Kālīs.[3-4]

This views is elaborately echoed in the 13th Āhnika also.

der Āṇavopāya), are essentially integral to Saṁvit-krama, an aspect of Krama system or Śāktopāya.[1]

The preceding item and the present one incidentally figure in the 5 Āhnika also.

(v) Parity between negation and injunction.[2]

The idea is briefly taken up in the 12th Āhnika also.

(vi) Homa and Laya as part of worship culminate into the supreme subject.[3]

This point has been taken up in the 29th Āhnika also as part of Arcāvidhi in Kulayāga.

(vii) An aspirant of the Samayī variety attains unity with the Godhead if he is steady with his practice of knowledge in tune with his intellectual equipment.[4]

This has specific relevance to Samayidīkṣā in the 15th Āhnika.

(viii) When it is Āgama versus Śruti on a common issue, it is Āgama that may sublate the Vedic injunction.[5]

Besides, the minor issues, though forming major topics elsewhere, discussed in the 4th Āhnika, include—

(1) The rise of intuitive knowledge (Prātibhajñāna) due to Śuddhā Vidyā (13th Āhnika),

(2) inter se relationship between the Upāyas (in the first seven Āhnikas),

(3) Anupāya lacking the Upāya character (2nd Āhnika),

(4) among Pralayākala subjects some become Mantra subjects by transcending the impure order and some continue to remain transmigratory (9th Āhnika),

(5) Pallī, Ghara, Chummā etc. (29th Āhnika), and

(6) observance of Samayācāra (15th Āhnika).

(e) Fifth Āhnika

(i) Because of subsidiary divisions there are infinite modes of Āṇavopāya.[1]

(ii) The host of practices like initiation etc., are subsumed under Āṇavopāya.[2]

Initiatory practices are specially dealt with in the 15th Āhnika.

(iii) Expansion and contraction constitute the es-

2. दीक्षादिर्विचित्रः कर्मकलापः भावी वक्ष्यमाणः आणवेऽन्तर्भविष्यति ।
T.A.V., II, p. 249

The above-noted statement is a remark by Jayaratha on T.A. 1.231—

प्रस्फुटेनैव रूपेण भावी सोऽन्तर्भविष्यति ॥

sence of dynamic principle called Mahāpīṭha (great seat) manifesting as creation and withdrawal.[1]

The subordinate items discussed include—

(1) The notion of Kuleśī (3rd Āhnika),
(2) sound·(Rāva) is tenfold (3rd Āhnika),
(3) concept of Visarga (emission) as linked with Liṅgasamāpatti (grasp of phallus or sign)—(3rd Āhnika),
(4) ecstatic murmur or sigh also marks the initial stage of meditational trance[2] (3rd Āhnika),
(5) the virility of Mantra finally rests in the principle of consciousness (8th Āhnika),
(6) inter se hierarchy of Upāyas (3rd-5th Āhnikas), and
(7) Karaṇas (11th, 15th, 16th, 29th and 32nd Āhnikas).

(f) SIXTH ĀHNIKA

(i) The ultimate power, which is one with Śiva,

T.A.V., II, p. 151

The verses under reference read—

2. सुखसीत्कारसत्सम्यक्साम्यप्रथमसंविदः । consists of eightyone letters when reckoned by half Mātrās.[1] The determinate thought marked by contemplation of 81 letters is conducive to the attainment of one's ultimate essence called Śiva.[2]

These eightyone letter are included within standard fifty letters of Nāgarī alphabet. This is dealt with in the 3rd and 7th Āhnikas. In fact this is a common theme of the 3rd and 6th Āhnikas.[3]

(ii) The sixfold division of the root passage (Ṣaḍadhva) is nothing but a vibration of the Godly dynamism.[4]

This has reference to the 7th and 11th Āhnikas as well.

1. अतएव चार्धमात्रागणनाक्रमेण एकाशीतिपदापि देवी वर्णपञ्चाशत्येवान्तर्भावयिष्यते, इत्याह—

2. एकाशीतिपदोदारशक्त्यामर्शात्मकस्ततः ॥

विकल्पः शिवतादायी पूर्वमेव निरूपितः । T.A. 7.37-38

Although Jayaratha is silent here, Abhinava's 'पूर्वमेव' obviously refers to T.A. 6.228-230 which reads—

तथा तथा परामर्शशक्तिचक्रेश्वरः प्रभुः । . . . . .

एकाशीतिपदोदारविमर्शक्रमबृंहित : ॥

3. . . . .एकाशीतिकलोदयः । इति प्रदर्शितपूर्वम् . . . . . . ।

Jayaratha adds पूर्वमिति तृतीयषष्ठाह्निकादौ । T.A.V., VII, p. 3638

4. तत्र शक्तिपरिस्पन्दस्तावान् प्राक् च निरूपितः ॥ T.A. 11.50

Jayaratha adds यश्चायं षोढाध्वविभागः स पूर्वस्तच्छक्तिपरिस्पन्द एवेत्युक्तं प्राग्बहुशः T.A.V., V, p. 2133. Jayaratha's 'बहुशः' implies the 6th and 7th Āhnikas also in addition to the 11th.

(iii) All these passages find their final repose in consciousness[1] or Prāna (breath).[2]

This view is echoed in the 7th, 8th and 10th Āhnikas.

(iv) Tuṭi has four parts.[3]

(v) First three phases of cosmic functionalism known as creation, sustenance and withdrawal.[4]

This is in contrast with the 14th and 13th Āhnikas dealing respectively with the fourth and fifth function i.e., Tirobhāva and Anugraha.

(vi) The great creation of Śākta order, and the three eggs as compared to the great creation.[5]

T.A.V., V, pp. 2416-17

(vii) Kāla as based on Prāṇa is the general theme.[1]

This also forms an important topic of the 7th Āhnika and 28th Āhnika (as identical with Kulaparva as part of Parvabheda under Bhairavakula).

(viii) The rise of Prāṇa.[2]

This has again been discussed in the 28th Āhnika under the ancillary topic called Mṛti.

(ix) The notion of the movement of Prāṇa (Prāṇacāra).[3] Once a Mantra has been identified with either Prāṇa or self there remains no difference between Mantra and its contemplator.

This has been discussed in the 29th Āhnika also.

The minor items include—

(1) Dynamicity is characterized by expansion and contraction (5th Āhnika),

(2) several Aṣṭakas (8th Āhnika), and

(3) twelve Rudras (33rd Āhnika).

1. कुलपर्वेति तद्ब्रूमो यथोक्तं भैरवे कुले ॥

3. यो विकल्पयते तस्य सिद्धिमुक्ती सुदूरतः ।
अथ षोडशलक्षादि प्राणचारे पुरोक्तवत् ॥ T.A. 29.91

Though Jayaratha is silent, "पुरोक्तवत्" obviously refers to the notion of Prāṇacāra whose treatment commences with the T.A. 6.23 onwards.

(g) SEVENTH ĀHNIKA

(i) It is the power of pure awareness that assumes the form of a Nāḍī.[1]

(ii) In common with the sixth Āhnika it propounds the theme of Kāla as dependent upon Prāṇa.[2]

(iii) The kindling of rise of cycles means the kindling of uttered Mantras.[3]

This forms the special feature of the 32nd Āhnika.

The minor issues involve—

(1) Inter se relationship of Upāyas (3rd, 4th and 5th Āhnikas),
(2) propounding 81 letters in the sound-system (6th Āhnika),
(3) final rest of all the passages in consciousness (6th and 8th Āhnikas), and
(4) sixfold division of the cosmic passage (6th and 11th Āhnikas).

(h) EIGHTH ĀHNIKA

(i) Regions falling under Deśādhvan are innumerable and varied which constitute the world.[4] Lack-

1. Commenting on the T.A. 8.283 (पुंसि नादमयी शक्तिः प्रसराख्या च यत्स्थिता) Jayaratha observes यदुक्तं प्राक्

3. बोधावेशः सन्निधिरैक्येन विसर्जनं स्वरूपगतिः ।
शङ्कादलनं चक्रोदयदीप्तिरिति क्रमात्कृत्यम् ॥ T.A. 32.67

While explaining Abhinava's above verse Jayaratha comes out with the following observation—

T.A.V., VII, p. 3625

4. देशाध्ववक्ष्यमाणनीत्या निःसंख्याकत्वादनन्ता नानासंनिवेशात्मकत्वाच्च ing as it does in essence, it is as good as a dream-abode.

(ii) The virility of Mantra basically rests on consciousness.[1]

This is taken up in the 5th Āhnika as well.

(iii) All the octads (Aṣṭakas) such as eight parts of a day etc., eight deities, eight powers etc. etc.[2]

This is again dealt with in the 9th Āhnika.

(iv) Treatment of the passage called Deśa.[3]

(v) The heterogeneous effects such as intelligence (Mahat) etc., are caused by inequilibrium of Guṇas.[4]

(vi) Not only 'spatial passage' but its subdivisions also[5] owing to difference in Guṇas.

According to this, the 8th Āh. will deal with regions of space, the 9th and 10th with categories and the 11th with Kalās.

4. कार्यमिति महदादि विजातीयमिति गुणानां वैषम्यात् । इत्येतच्च पुरा भुवनाध्वनिरूपणावसरे एवोक्तम् इति न पुनरिहायस्तम् । Ibid., IV, p. 1813

5. भुवनं पृगथेवात्र दर्शितं गुणभेदतः । T.A. 9.224

Jayaratha remarks अत्र च ग्रन्थिवत् भुवनविभागोऽपि पूर्वमेव दर्शितः . . . . तदुक्तं प्राक्—

'क्रमात् तमोरजःसत्त्वे गुरूणां पङ्क्तयः स्थिताः ।
तिस्रो द्वात्रिंशदेकातस्त्रिंशदप्येकविंशतिः ॥' (T.A. 8.260-261)
T.A.V., IV, p. 1814

This issue is relevant to the 9th Āhnika also.

(vii) The theme of Deśa, together with that of categories and Kalās, is objective in character.[1]

Tattva and Kalā discussed respectively in the 9-10th and 11th Āhnikas share the objective character of Deśa while the passages of Pada, Mantra and Varṇa partake of the subjective character and are treated in the later part of the 11th Ahnika.

(viii) The concept of Vidyāpadma[2] (lotus consisting of Śuddhavidyā—pure knowledge) which is below Brahmarandhra and also the trans-Māyā region of Brahmā.[3]

These types have been dealt with again in the 15th Āhnika.

(ix) Under the nine types of 'piercing' (Vedha), the 'piercing' relating to regions.[4]

This is in fact one of the major constituents of the last ancillary topic under Rahasyaprakriyā in the 29th Āhnika.

The minor items include—

(1) Incidental discussion of the 'passage of time'

(Kālādhvan) consisting of Pada, Mantra and Varṇa (11th Āhnika),

(2) individual's power (which is) of the nature of sound designated as Prasarā (7th Āhnika), and

(3) agency as belonging to Puruṣa and not to inert Prakṛti (9th Āhnika).

(i) NINTH ĀHNIKA

(i) All the categories within the fold of Māyā are known through inference from their effects.[1]

(ii) The two types of Pralayākala subjects—some belonging to Mantra cadre beyond the realm of Māyā and others continuing as empirical subjects glued to transmigration—are due to variety of Kārma Mala.[2]

(iii) Kārma Mala is absent in Vijñānākala subject.[3]

(iv) Vijñānākala acts as a ladder to the attainment of Śivahood.[4]

1. इत्याद्युक्तेः तन्मात्राणि इति, स्वकार्येभ्यो भूतेभ्य एषाम् अनुमेयत्वम्। एवम् अनेनैव अनुमानेन मायान्तः सकलतत्त्ववर्गोऽनुमातव्यः। एतच्च तत्त्वाध्वनि भविष्यति इति नेहायस्तम्। T.A.V., II, p. 219

Vide also—

(v) The rise of Vijñānākala subject is consequent upon the differentiation between Puruṣa and Prakṛti in the wake of exhaustion of all the deeds.[1]

This is briefly taken up in the 10th and 13th Āhnikas.

(vi) Within the realm of Māyā all the categories from Kalā down to earth differ from self to self.[2]

(vii) Śakti category is the instrument of Śiva category.[3]

This concept has been discussed in the 10th Āhnika in detail.

(viii) Concept of ignorance called Mala.[4]

विज्ञानाकलतां प्राप्तः केवलादधिकारतः ।।
मलान्मन्त्रतदीशादिभावमेति सदा शिवात् । T.A. 13.275

Jayaratha connects it with the 9th Āhnika—

Jayaratha adds संप्रचक्षते इत्यग्रे । T.A.V., IV, p. 1764

अग्रे would mean 'later in the 9th Āhnika itself'.

3. स्वातन्त्र्यमात्रसद्भावा या त्विच्छा शक्तिरैश्वरी ।
शिवस्य सैव करणं तथा वेत्ति करोति च । T.A. 10.17

Jayaratha connects it with the 9th Āhnika उक्तं च प्राक् इति

Jayaratha identifies the Āhnika पूर्वाह्निक इति नवमाह्निकादौ ।
T.A.V., V, p. 2237

This has been discussed in the 1st Āhnika also, primarily as an offshoot of freedom.

(ix) Concept of specific type of ignorance called Kārma Mala which is relied upon by the self as an instrument to bind itself owing to its intrinsic freedom.[1]

Both of these items vide serial No. (viii) and (ix) figure in the 13th Āhnika as well.

(x) Both, the pentadic system of categories and the triadic system thereof (Pañcatattvavidhi and Tritattvavidhi), originate from the variation in primary categories.[2]

This view is held in common with the 10th Āhnika and is incidentally discussed in the 11th Āhnika.

(xi) Agency belongs to conscious principle called Puruṣa and not to inert Prakṛti.[3]

(xii) Initiation of the dying due to inherent potency of Mantra.[4]

प्राणैर्वियोजितोऽप्येष भुङ्क्ते शेषफलं यतः ॥ T.A. 13.236-37

This is discussed briefly in the 13th Āhnika and specially in the 19th Āhnika.

(xiii) There is gradual hierarchy amongst the Vaiṣṇavas, Mantra subjects, Mantreśa subjects etc. Although they all are under the spell of ignorance they mark out the stages of gradual awakening.[1]

This is discussed again in the 10th Āhnika and also in the 35 th Āhnika from a different point of view.

(xiv) That form of deity alone which is dense or compact with awareness and bliss is worthy of being adored.[2]

This theme is shared by the 9th Āhnika in common with the 13th. This again figures in the 26th Āhnika as a part of the residual daily routine (Seṣavṛtti under Nityakarmavidhi).

Among the auxiliary items covered are the following—

(1) Fifty varieties of immersion (3rd and 9th Āhnikas),

Jayaratha comments on उक्तं च पूर्वमेवैतद् as पूर्वमिति नवमाह्निके। (T.A. 9.130-31) यदुक्तं तत्र

Jayaratha suggests पुरेति नवमत्रयोदशाह्निकादौ। T.A.V., V, p. 3078

(2) non-reversal of the deed that has commenced giving fruits (19th Āhnika), and

(3) ineffectiveness of the principle of Kalā (limited action) in the initiation relating to immediate salvation (19th Āhnika).

(j) Tenth Āhnika

(i) The macrocosmic character of the categories beginning with earth etc. due to internal sub-division such as fifteen etc.[1]

This is briefly discussed in the 1st Āhnika.

(ii) Five stages, beginning with waking or Piṇḍastha as the object of Yogins and Jñānins.[2]

This idea is extended to Kulayāga in the 29th Āhnika as well.

(iii) It is through identification with the self that the subject is able to cognize all the objects.[3]

The ancillary issues discussed are—

(1) Absence of Kārma impurity in the Vijñānākala subject (9th and 13th Āhnikas),

(2) graded hierarchy among the subjects such as Vaiṣṇavas, Mantra, Mantreśa etc., (9th Āhnika),

(3) final repose of all the passages (Adhvan) in Prāṇa (6th Āhnika),

1. धरादेर्विश्वरूपत्वं पाञ्चदश्यादिभेदतः । T.A. 1.196

Jayaratha adds एतच्च तत्त्वभेदने भविष्यति इति ग्रन्थविस्तरभयात् नेह श्रायस्तम् । T.A.V., II, p. 223

2. पिण्डस्थादि च पूर्वोक्तं सर्वातीतावसानकम् ।

(4) four parts of Tuṭi (6th Āhnika),
(5) success of a means of knowledge as depending on subject (1st Āhnika), and
(6) absence of Yoga in the fifth--Turyātīta—stage (2nd Āhnika).

(k) Eleventh Āhnika

(i) The Karaṇa (i.e., instrument, techincally 'conscious practice') of pure awareness.[1] This forms the 6th Upāya under Āṇava-upāya.

This is partly discussed in the 5th Āhnika.

(ii) Comprehensive treatment of Kālādhvan as one of the three sub-passages under Deśādhavan.[2]

The topic has been introduced in the 8th Āhnika.

(iii) Discussion on the three sub-passages e.g., Pada, Mantra and Varṇa, as constituting Kālādhvan (i.e., passage of time or dynamicity) and as being subjective is character.[3]

The idea is initially mooted out in the 8th and subsequent Āhnikas.

(iv) The assignment of Padādhvan (word-passage) in Putrakadīkṣā as ancillary to Śodhyavaicitrya (variety of the items subject to refinement).[4]

1. तथाहि . . . "यत्तु सर्वाविभागात्म स्वतंत्रं बोधसुन्दरम् ॥

4. अपरादिविधित्रैतादथ न्यासः पदाध्वनः ।
पूर्वं दशपदी चोक्ता स्वतन्त्रा न्यस्यते यदा ॥ T.A. 16.132

(v) Same is the case with the assignment of Mantrādhvan (Mantra-passage).[1]

These two items figure in the 16th Āhnika as well.

(vi) Sixfold division of the passages is nothing but the vibration of power.[2]

This is mainly discussed in the 6th and 7th Āhnikas.

(vii) The notion of gradual purification of the passages (Adhvaśuddhi) as derived from the Svacchandatantra.[3]

Its non-sequential counterpart is taken up in the 18th Āhnika.

The ancillary issues treated include the pentadic and the triadic systems of categories (9th and 10th Āhnikas).

(1) Twelfth Āhnika

The Āhnika primarily aims at bringing out the utility of Adhvans. However, during discussions no major item has been pointed out either by Abhinavagupta or by Jayaratha. Among the ancillary topics covered is the parity between injunction and prohibition (Niṣedhavidhitulyatva—T.A. 12.14-22) which forms an important topic in the fourth Āhnika.

(m) Thirteenth Āhnika

(i) Gradual loss of innate impurity (Āṇava Mala) as invariably linked up with variation in the descent of divine grace.[1]

This is one of the main themes in 1st Āhnika.

(ii) Variation in the descent of divine grace.[2]

The 4th Āhnika too discusses this issue in detail.

(iii) Grace (Anugraha) as the sole cause behind the removal of ignorance i.e., delimitation, and its twofold division into (a) quick and (b) gradual.[3] The entire creation ensues from the principle of delimitation or contraction.

Jayaratha adds प्रागिति शक्तिपातपरीक्षाह्निके । T.A.V., VII, p. 3199
The exact reference is to the T.A. 13.114-116.

This point is briefly touched in the 28th Āhnika.

(iv) Two types of descent of grace, namely primary and secondary. The primary is characterised by complete devotion to the Godhead without any desire for fruit, while the secondary is marked by desire for fruit necessarily involving deeds etc.[1]

(v) Due to the unrestricted Godly will the purity of consciousness may be inherited from previous birth.[2]

(vi) The intuitional wisdom, having an all-encompassing scope, arises from the principle of pure knowledge (Śuddhavidyā) alone and does not depend either on guide or on scripture.[3]

This is discussed in the 1st, 2nd and 4th Āhnikas as well.

(vii) Refutation of dualists' position in treating ignorance or impurity as a substance and initiation as an activity and consequent depiction of the pre-

(viii) Individuation stems from the Godly freedom which alone, in the final analysis, is the ultimate residue.[2]

(x) Introduction of the idea of Liṅgoddhāradīkṣā.[4]

This is the main them of the 22nd Āhnika.

(xi) Modality of Anuttara Dīkṣā as enjoined in different tantric systems.[5]

1. मलो नाम किल द्रव्यं चक्षुःस्थपटलादिवत् ।
तद्विहन्त्री क्रिया दीक्षा त्वञ्जनादिकर्मवत् ।।
तत्पुरस्तान्निषेत्स्यामो युक्त्यागमविगर्हितम् ।
मलमायाकर्मणां च दर्शयिष्यामहे स्थितिम् ।। T.A. 1.239-40

Although Jayaratha does not offer any clue with regard to पुरस्तात् and दर्शयिष्यामहे, the reference is obviously to the 9th and 13th Āhnikas.

2. स्वातन्त्र्यात्तु तिरोभावबन्धो भोगेऽस्य भोक्तृताम् ।

सिद्धवीरावलिसारे भैरवीये कुलेऽपि च ।।
पञ्चदीक्षाक्रमोपात्ता दीक्षानुत्तरसंज्ञिता । T.A. 22.40-42

(xii) The method behind attainment of salvation, even without support from a teacher, by an aspirant who rejoins the system after drifting away under the spell of ignorance.[1]

Although it is the prime concern of the 23rd Āhnika, the procedure has been detailed in the 13th Āhnika.

(xiii) Principle of agency which also includes total surrender of all Japa to the Godhead which is compact with consciousness and bliss.[2]

This is held in common with the 9th Āhnika. Incidentally the 26th Āhnika also pays attention to it.

Among the ancillary items the following find special mention—

(1) The hierarchical relationship among the means of redemptive knowledge (Upāyas) (Ist Āhnika),

(2) the great creation of Sakta class (6th and 14th Āhnikas),

(3) absence of Kārma Mala in Vijñānākala subjects (9th Āhnika),

Jayaratha says all this has been duly considered in the 13th Āhnika एतच्च त्रयोदशाह्निक एव विचारितमिति तत एव अवधार्यम् ।

2. Jayaratha explains पुरा as नवमत्रयोदशाह्निकादौ) (T.A.V.,VI,p. 3078) while commenting upon the following verse—

कृत्वा जपं ततः सर्वं देवतायै समर्पयेत् ।
तच्चोक्तं कर्तृतातत्त्वनिरूपणविधौ पुरा ॥ T.A. 26.68

(4) pre-eminent position of the teacher of Akalpitakalpaka, specially Sāṁsiddhika, type and identity of Svayambhū with Sāṁsiddhika (4th Āhnika),

(5) initiation of the dying (Maraṇāsannadīkṣā) (9th Āhnika),

(6) primary ignorance and Kārma ignorance (9th Āhnika) and

(7) Liṅgoddhārādidīkṣā's irrelevance to the seeker of Trika principle (Trikārthin) (9th Āhnika).

(n) Fourteenth Āhnika

(i) Initiatory activity is mainly addressed to those who are devoid of knowledge.[1]

The idea finds its echo in the 15th and 16th Āhnikas as well.

(ii) The fourth phase of Godly functionalism namely, disappearance (Tirobhāva).[2]

(o) Fifteenth Āhnika

(i) Inclusion of the host of activities represented by initiation etc., in Āṇava Upāya.[3]

This is also a prominent point of discussion in the 5th Āhnika.

1. ज्ञानोपायस्तु दीक्षादिक्रिया ज्ञानवियोगिनाम् ।
इत्यधुनैवास्तां स्वप्रस्तावे भविष्यति ॥ T.A. 13.155

Jayaratha adds अधुना आस्तामेवेति शक्तिपातविचित्रतानिरूपणावसरे तत्प्रसंगाभावात् । अतएवोक्तं स्वप्रस्तावे भविष्यति । स्वप्रस्ताव इति दीक्षाप्रकरणे ।
T.A.V., V, p. 2299

2. इति संप्रत्यवशिष्टं तिरोभावाख्यं पञ्चमं कृत्यं द्वितीयार्धेन प्रतिपादयितुमाह–'तिरोभावस्वरूपं तु कथ्यमानं विविच्यताम् ।' (T.A. 14.1)
Ibid., V, p. 2415

3. दीक्षादिर्विचित्रकर्मकलापः भावी वक्ष्यमाणः आणवेऽन्तर्भविष्यति ।
Ibid., II, p. 249

(ii) Initiation liberates even those who are neither proficient in knowledge, nor in Yoga.[1]

This issue has incidentally figured in the 14th and 16th Āhnikas also.

(iii) One of the seven Karaṇas (i.e., conscious practice) under Āṇava Upāya called Vyāpti (permeation).[2]

The issue has been raised in the 5th Āhnika with reference to other Karaṇas finding expression in the other Āhnikas e.g., 11th, 16th, 29th, and 32nd etc.

(iv) Virility in a Mantra arises not from book but from teacher. Mantra, therefore, has to be well-guarded and discreetly transmitted.[3]

(v) The process of unification (Yojanikā) behind the fetter-burning (Pāśa-dāha).[4]

1. ननु ज्ञानयोगादिवन्ध्यस्य दैशिकोऽपि किं कुर्यात् इत्याशंक्याह

3. ततः सुशिक्षितां स्थानदेहान्तःशोधनत्रयीम् ॥
न्यासं ध्यानं जपं मुद्रां पूजां कुर्यात्प्रयत्नतः । T.A. 26.28-29
Jayaratha explains सुशिक्षितामिति as पंचदशाह्निकोक्तयुक्त्या ।
T.A.V., VI, p. 3065

4. ततः प्रागुक्तसकलप्रमेयं परिचिन्तयन् ॥

शिष्यसंविदभिन्नां च मन्त्रवह्न्याद्यभेदिनीम् ॥
ध्यायन् प्राग्वत् प्रयोगेण शिवं सकलनिष्कलम् ।

According to the original index of the ancillary items of Abhinavagupta this ought to be the proper topic of the 17th Āhnika. However, the relative procedure is detailed in the 15th and 16th Āhnikas. Jayaratha's statement below further implies that the 17th Āhnika is, in a sense, continuation of the 15th and 16th.

(vi) Daily worship of the sacred ground (Sthaṇḍila) as part of the residual or subsidiary functions (Śeṣavṛtti).[1]

Daily worship on the ground is one of the main themes in the 26th Āhnika.

(vii) Method of holding and abandoning the tooth-twig (used as tooth-brush, lit. Dantakāṣṭha)[2] as part of the daily routine.

This method is re-employed in the context of Śiva-hastavidhi representing other (than one's own) system in the 29th Āhnika.

(viii) Variety of special assignment.[3] This also covers the sixfold assignment (Soḍhānyāsa).[1]

(ix) Variety of consecrations[2] in the overall context of the assignment of the eligibility of the prospective initiate.

This constitutes the Ist ancillary topic in the 15th Āhnika (beginning at the T.A. 15.30) according to the original scheme of Abhinavagupta.

(x) External means constitute the gradual process specially for those whose consciousness is not fully awake.[3]

Among the minor issues occur the following—

(1) Initiation's role in Anupāya is insignificant (2nd Āhnika),

(2) procedure for the adoration of preceptorial lineage (16th Āhnika),

Obviously the reference is to the T.A. 15.239 where the Viśesanyāsa begins.

1. पूर्वेण विधिनास्त्रं च कर्कर्यां विघ्ननुद्यजेत् । T.A. 15.387

According to Jayaratha पूर्वेण विधिना means षोढान्यासादिना which again brings us to the T.A. 15.239.

2. निरीक्षणं प्रोक्षणं च ताडनाप्यायने तथा ।

(3) single articulation (Ekoccāra) connected with summary initiation (18th Āhnika),
(4) occasional rites (28th Āhnika),
(5) fifty Rudras in the assignment of matrices (Mātrkānyāsa) (33rd Āhnika),
(6) reconciliation with Brahmavidyā method (19th and 30th Āhnikas) and
(7) Sivahastavidhi (29th Āhnika).

(p) Sixteenth Āhnika

(i) One of the seven Karaṇas (i.e., conscious practice) under Āṇava Upāya relating to the cognizer and the cognizable.[1]

(ii) Procedure for veneration of the preceptorial lineage.[2]

(iii) The process of unification (Yojanikā) behind the fetter-burning (Pāśa-dāha) in common with the 15th and 17th Āhnikas.

(iv) The alternative course of the assignment of dagger etc. (Kṣurikādinyāsa) in the allied view where the offering of oblation is permissible (as against the regular course under initiation pertaining to the instantaneous passing away—Sadya Utkrānti—which has no room for oblation).[3]

3. षोडशाधारषट्चक्रलक्ष्मत्रयखपञ्चकात् ।
क्वचिदन्यतरत्राथ प्रागुक्तपशुकर्मवत् ॥ (T.A. 19.15)

The ancillary items include—

(1) Initiation's effectiveness in occasioning release of the one who is devoid of both knowledge and Yoga (15th Āhnika),

(2) the assignment of Padādhvan and Mantrādhvan (word-, Mantra-passage) (11th Āhnika),

(3) initiation of a teacher at the time of the descent of grace (13th Āhnika),

(4) due to gradual unfoldment of self-consciousness even the inert becomes divine (1st Āhnika), and

(5) the trident constitutes a ring in a collective rite (31st Āhnika).

(q) Seventeenth Āhnika

(i) Assignment of 15 letters in the garland of letters (Akṣasūtra) comprising 115 letters to be followed by assignment of Mātṛkā and Mālinī.[1]

(ii) Modality for refinement of the purifiable categories.[2]

(iii) This, as we have seen, is an extension of the 15th and 16th Āhnikas, so far as unificatory process behind the burning of fetters is concerned.

Jayaratha adds पुरेति तत्त्वदीक्षाप्रकरणे T.A.V., VII, p. 3423

Perhaps it refers to the T.A. 17.7 onwards.

(r) Eighteenth Āhnika

(i) Single articulation (Ekoccāra) as an ingredient of the summary initiation (Saṁkṣiptadīkṣā)[1].

(ii) The trans-gradual process of pruification of the sixfold cosmic passage.[2]

> In fact out of the twofold refinement, gradual and trans-gradual, the first one adopts the procedure as laid down in the Svacchanda Tantra, while the latter follows the course as laid down in the 18th Āhnika.

(s) Nineteenth Āhnika

(i) Fruition of Ārabdha Karma (deeds whose fruition has already begun) cannot be reversed even with reference to the initiation embarked upon for securing release of the dying.[3]

उत्क्रमय्य ततस्त्वेनं परतत्त्वे नियोजयेत् ॥" (T.A. 19.8) इति ।

T.A.V., IV, pp. 1737-38

(ii) Kalā, the principle of limited agency, fails to produce its fruit in the form of limited doership while maintaing its association with the individual self who has become isolated due to the initiation for instantaneous release (Sadyonirvāṇadīkṣā).[1]

Among the minor issue the following have been referred to—

(1) Two optional views regarding the assignment of dagger—gradual (30th Āhnika) and non-gradual (16th Āhnika),

(2) ineligibility of a non-yogin in respect of physical movement or articulation (30th Āhnika) in the context of the initiation for the instantaneous passing away, and

(3) Brahmavidyā (30 Āhnika).

(t) TWENTIETH ĀHNIKA

No major issue has been indicated. Only one minor item i.e., 2nd stage of Sakti called Udbhava, which is synonymous with Laghubhāva (lightness), has been alluded to in the context of Tulādīkṣā (the proper theme of the 20th Āhnika) as an item to be discussed in detail in the 30th Āhnika.

(u) TWENTYFIRST ĀHNIKA

(i) The indirect initiation (Parokṣadīkśā) relating to the dead, termed as redemptive initiation of the dead (Mṛtoddhāradīkṣā).[2]

1. सद्योनिर्वाणदीक्षोत्थपुंविश्लेषे हि सा सती ।
शिलष्यन्त्यपि च नो सूते तथापि स्वफले क्वचित् ॥ T.A. 9.177

2. सर्वेषामधरस्थानां गुर्वन्तानामपि स्फुटम् ।
शक्तिपातात्पुरा प्रोक्तात् कुर्यादन्त्येष्टिदीक्षणम् ।

In fact indirect initiation is of two kinds. One relates to the dead and is an extension of the instantaneous passing away (19th Āhnika) and the other relates to the alive (though dying) and is associated with the ground-rite (Sthaṇḍila Yāga) in the 26th Āhnika. This has a special bearing on the funeral rite (24th Āhnika).

(v) Twentysecond Āhnika

(i) Necessity of an additional course called Liṅgoddhāra (elevation of phallus or sign) for the heterodox who ultimately turn to the fold of monistic Śaivism.[1]

Incidentally this issue figures in the 13th and 35th Āhnikas.

Among the ancillary items Anuttaradīkṣā in Kula (13th Āhnika) has also been briefly touched upon.

(w) Twentythird Āhnika

(i) Aspirants of the 'reborn' (Punarbhū) variety[2] i.e., those who though ineligible for Liṅgoddhāra-dīkṣā are eager to rejoin Śaiva fold.

यत्किंचित्कथितं पूर्वं मृतोद्धाराभिधे विधौ ।
प्रतिमायां तदेवात्र सर्वं शवतनौ चरेत् ।। T.A. 24.2/5

Comments Jayaratha पुरा इति मृतोद्धारदीक्षायाम् । T.A.V., VI, p. 3033 मृतोद्धारदीक्षा possibly refers to जालविधि under परोक्षदीक्षा in the 21st Āhnika.

1. ननु यदि एवं शैवबौद्धादिरेव आगमः तत् बौद्धादिशास्त्रवर्तिनां शिवशास्त्रौन्मुख्ये कस्मात् लिङ्गोद्धारादिसंस्कारान्तरमपि उक्तमित्याशंकां दृष्टान्तोपदर्शनेन उपशमयति

2. साधकाचार्यतामार्गे न योग्यास्ते पुनर्भवः ।
पुनर्भवोऽपि ज्ञानेद्धा भवन्ति गुरुतास्पदम् ।। T.A. 22.29

It is however closely connected with Liṅgoddhāradīkṣā in the previous Āhnika.

Among the ancillary items is included the method of achieving salvation without preceptorial assistance by one who returns to the fold after having been led astray (13th Āhnika).

(x) TWENTYFOURTH ĀHNIKA

No major or minor theme has been referred to.

(y) TWENTYFIFTH ĀHNIKA

No major or minor issue is found to have been referred to.

(z) TWENTYSIXTH ĀHNIKA

(i) Method or procedure pertaining to Anuyāga (i.e., subsequent or subordinate rite) or subordinate or residual issue.[1]

This is an important item under Kula system (29th Āhnika) and has been discussed under Maṇḍala—one of the four limbs of a Kula treatise i.e., Vidyā, Mantra, Mudrā and Maṇḍala.

(ii) Like body, as above, one should visualize circularity (Maṇḍalātmatva) in breath also. This is again a part of Anuyāga.[2]

Jayaratha adds ते च "पुनर्भूश्चान्यलिङ्गो यः पुनः शैवे प्रतिष्ठितः" (T.A. 23.10) इति लक्षयिष्यमाणाः । T.A.V., VI, p. 2980

2. अथवा प्राणवृत्तिस्थं समस्तं देवतागणम् ।
पश्येत्पूर्वोक्तयुक्त्यैव तत्रैवाभ्यर्चयेद्गुरुः ॥ T.A. 27.178

(iii) Conception of the deities presiding over cycles in relation to those who are given to action.[1]

Among the minor themes the following are alluded to—

(1) Virility of a Mantra solely depends upon its being received from a teacher (15th Āhnika),
(2) daily worship of ground as part of residual activities (15th Āhnika) and
(3) esoteric or mystic rite consisting of throwing away into deep waters (29th Āhnika).

(aa) Twentyseventh Āhnika

No topic, either primary or ancillary, has been taken note of.

(bb) Twentyeighth Āhnika

(i) Samayin's entitlement to the occasional rites (Naimittika Karma).[2] Occasional rites are the dominant theme of the 28th Āhnika.[3]

Though Jayarath does not explain पूर्वोक्तयुक्त्यैव, context makes it abundantly clear that Abhinavagupta is referring to Anuyāgavidhi.

1. ते तत्र शक्तिचक्रे तेनैवानन्दरसमयेन बहिः ॥
दिक्षु चतसृषु प्रोक्तक्रमेण गणनाथतः प्रभृति सर्वम् । T.A. 29.130-31

Jayaratha adds तेनैवेति अभ्युदितरूपेण । प्रोक्तेति नित्यार्चाभिधानावसरे । T.A.V., VII, p. 3384. नित्यार्चाभिधानावसरे refers to the T.A. 26.38 onwards.

2. समय्यधिकृतोऽन्यत्र गुरुणा विभुमर्चयेत् ॥ T.A. 15.521

Jayaratha explains अन्यत्र इति नैमित्तिकादौ । T.A.V., VI, p. 2698

It may be noted that the 15th Āhnika deals with Nitya Karma while the 28th with Naimittika Karma.

3. यागादौ यागमध्ये च यागान्ते गुरुपूजने ।
नैमित्तिकेषु प्रोक्तेषु शिष्यः कुर्यादिमं विधिम् ॥ T.A. 29.291

Jayaratha adds प्रोक्तेष्विति अष्टाविंशाह्निके । T.A.V., VII, p. 3277

This has been incidentally dealt with in the 15th Āhnika and also in the context of Vedhadīksā in the 29th Āhnika.

(ii) Kulaparva as part of the variety of Parvans in the Bhairavakula.[1]

The ancillary topics include—

(1) Rise of Prāna especially under the sub-topic Mrti (6th Āhnika),

(2) atonement for the violation of rules (Samaya-niskrti) (29th Āhnika) and

(3) congregation or union of Yoginīs (Yoginīme-laka—9th Anuja in this Āhnika and one of the 23 occasionals) (30th Āhnika).

(cc) TWENTYNINTH ĀHNIKA

(i) Supreme utility of semen and blood.[2]

This is discussed briefly in the 3rd Āhnika also.

(ii) Preceptorial identificatory distinctions such as Ghara, Pallī, Mudrā and Churnmā etc.[3]

1. कुलपर्वेति तद्ब्रूमो यथोक्तं भैरवे कुले । T.A. 28.14

2. यल्लोहितं तदग्निर्यद्वीर्यं सूर्येन्दुविग्रहम् ।
श्र इति ब्रह्म परमं तत्संघट्टोदयात्मकम् ।। T.A. 23.227

According to Jayaratha it refers to the 29th Āhnika. Says he श्रतएव धामत्रयात्मकत्वादेतदुभयमपि कुण्डगोलकादिशब्दव्यपदेश्यं परं पावनं, येनास्य "....तत्रार्धः शक्तिसंगमात् ।" (T.A. 29.15)

3. श्रादिशब्देन च घरं पल्ली पीठोपपीठकम् ।।
मुद्रा छुम्मेति तेषां च विधानं स्वपरस्थितम् । T.A. 4.267-68

Jayaratha adds "घरम्" इति षण्णां साधिकाराणां राजपुत्राणां भिन्नं भिन्नमाश्रमस्थानम् । "पल्ली" भिक्षास्थानम् । यद्वक्ष्यति—"एते हि साधिकाराः ....षट्कं घरपल्लिपीठगं क्रमशः ।।" (T.A. 29.35-39)
T.A.V., III, pp. 913-14

These items have also been enjoined upon for the benefit of the aspirant towards the end of the 4th Āhnika.

(iii) Two Karaṇas (i.e., conscious practice) of relinquishment and projection (Tyāga and Ākṣepa)[1].

These find place in the 5th Āhnika in an overall general context.

(iv) The method of entry into deep waters as part of the ground-rite (Sthaṇḍila Yāga).[2]

(v) The technique of Śiva's hand (Śivahastavidhi) where atonement for breach of rules is also provided for.[3]

(vi) In Kulayāga one should aim at realizing the Absolutic character in oneself by unification of both seat and power in one's body.[4]

Although Śivahastavidhi is also found in the T.A. 15.456, the present reference is to the 29th Āhnika (T.A. 29.186 onwards) because of the suggestion implied in समनन्तराह्निके.

4. तत्रोक्तमन्त्रतादात्म्याद्भैरवात्मत्वमानयेत् ॥ T.A. 29.22

Jayaratha adds उक्ता मातृसद्भावादयः । वक्ष्यति हि—

(vii) Four Āhnikas from 29th to 32nd constitute the four-seated Kula scripture consisting of Mantra, Mudrā, Vidyā and Maṇḍala. The 29th Āhnika pertains to Vidyā.[1]

These four are the extension of the mode of worship (Upāsanāvidhi) according to Kulaprakriyā.

The ancillary items referred to include—

(1) Movement of breath under 'mode of worship' in Kulayāga (6th Āhnika),
(2) nine divisions of Vedha (8th Āhnika),
(3) method of picking and abandoning the tooth-twig (15th Āhnika),
(4) refinement of categories as per Putraka initiation (17th Āhnika),
(5) method of worship as enjoined in Anuyāga (26th Āhnika),
(6) subdivisions of categories in terms of pentadic states forming objects of Jñānins' and Yogins' experience (10th Āhnika),
(7) Homa and Laya (oblation and repose) as part of worship culminating into supreme subjectivity (4th Āhnika) and
(8) mode of occasional functionalism (28th Āhnika).

T.A.V., VII, p. 3404

(dd) THIRTIETH ĀHNIKA

(i) The mode of assignment of the dagger etc.[1]

This is especially discussed as the 2nd ancillary item in the 19th Āhnika according to the original Abhinavan scheme. This is again discussed in the 16th Āhnika. In the former oblation is prohibited, while in the latter it is enjoined full scale.

(ii) Brahmavidyā[2]—a special type of Mantra propagated by Bhūtirāja and invoked to secure instant release.

This finds a sepcial mention in the 19th Āhnika.

(iii) Udbhava (rise) as the 2nd of the five stages of power under Tulādīkṣā (20th Āhnika) means lightness (Laghubhāva) consequent upon the disappearance of body.[3]

(iv) Redemption of Mantras which includes two types of the union of Yoginīs[4], one forcibly and the other willingly.

(v) As a constituent of Catuṣpīṭhaśāstra the present Āhnika represents Mantra.

Jayaratha adds मंत्रोद्धृतप्रसंगे इति त्रिशाह्निके । T.A.V., VII, p. 3263

(ee) Thirtyfirst Āhnika

(i) Cycle or ring constituted by a trident is necessary[1] according to the Trikasadbhāva. Similarly assignment of the trident-lotus[2] is approved by Abhinavagupta following the Triśirobhairava.

(ii) In a collective rite the trident-lotus itself constitutes the ring or circumference.[3]

(iii) As a part of the four seated system this Āhnika represents Maṇḍala.

(ff) Thirtysecond Āhnika

(i) Description of the seventh Karaṇa (i.e., conscious practice) called Sanniveśa (form, arrangement or deep entry) through unravelling of the notion of Mudrā.[4]

(ii) As a part of the four-seated system it represents the item Mudrā (posture).

Among the ancillary issues the kindling of the

This probably refers to the T.A. 32.10 onwards.

recited Mantras (7th Āhnika) is the only item that has been referred to.

(gg) Thirtythird Āhnika

(i) The number of deities in a cycle may vary from those in the other due to intrinsic Godly freedom. In this Āhnika the six-spoked cycle representing six divinities has been discussed.[1]

(ii) Fifty Rudras, the assignment (Nyāsa) on whom helps accomplishment of external worship (Bahiryāga) known as Mātṛkānyāsa. These Rudras are syllabic embodiments of power.[2]

(iii) Similarly, the twelve Rudras from Dakṣa to Pitāmaha have also been discussed.[3]

Among the ancillary items the following have been referred to—

1. षडात्मा इति, यद्वक्ष्यति—
"विश्वा तदीशिका रौद्री वीरका त्र्यम्बिका तथा।
गुर्वीति षडरे देव्य . . . . . ॥" ((T.A. 33.2)) T.A.V., II, p. 153

The reading in the relevant printed portion, however, slightly differs as under—

विश्वा तदीशा हारौद्री वीरनेत्र्यम्बिका तथा।
गुर्वीति षडरे देव्यः श्रीसिद्धावीरदर्शिताः ॥ T.A. 33.2

2. ललाटवक्त्रे दृक्कर्णनासागण्डरदौष्ठगे ॥ . . . .
इत्येष मातृकान्यासो मालिन्यास्तु निरूप्यते ॥ T.A. 15.117-120

Jayaratha adds एतद्वाच्याश्च पञ्चाशद्रुद्रा एकीकाराह्निके वक्ष्यन्ते इति तत एव अवधार्याः। T.A.V., VI, p. 2501

3. प्राणीये वर्ष एतस्मिन्कार्तिकादिषु दक्षतः ॥

The reference is to the T.A. 33.8-9 which reads

दक्षश्चण्डो हरः शौण्डी प्रमथो भीममन्मथौ ॥
शकुनिः सुमतिर्नन्दो गोपालश्च पितामहः।

(1) The alleged division of various cycles is basically one and culminates into Trika (1st Āhnika), and

(2) the infinite variety of cycles represented by 81 letters (3rd and 6th Āhnikas).

(hh) THIRTYFOURTH ĀHNIKA

No major or minor issue is noticed to have been referred to.

(ii) THIRTYFIFTH ĀHNIKA

(i) All the Āgamas share one essential character that their strength is derived from convention or general consensus (Prasiddhi).[1] This is the reason behind compulsive acceptability of the Āgamas.

Among the ancillary issues the necessity of an additional course called Liṅgoddhāra (22nd Āhnika) has been alluded to.

(jj) THIRTYSIXTH & THIRTYSEVENTH ĀHNIKAS

No issue, whether minor or major, has been found referred to.

From the above account we may conveniently conclude that the Āhnikas 1, 4, 8, 9, 11, 13, 15 and 29 have caught the fancy of Abhinava and Jayaratha

1. उक्तनीत्यैव सर्वत्र व्यवहारे प्रवर्तिते ।

T.A.V., VIII, p. 3681

more as compared to the other Āhnikas presumably because of greater importance of their subject matter. Likewise the Āhnikas 27, 34, 36 and 37 have not arrested their attention at all while making internal cross-references.

CHAPTER FIVE

AGENDA FOR FUTURE RESEARCH

At the very outset we pointed out the limitations of the present 'Introduction'. It is at the most an elementary attempt to understand the technique of the Tantrāloka by piecing together obvious but scattered indications about its contents, their organic treatment and the guiding norms that characterised the approach of two master minds. An attempt has also been made to enlarge and deepen our familiarity with the environ, contributions, and personal details of the author and the commentator of the Tantrāloka. In Indian parlance it offers a Bahiraṅga treatment. It covers only two steps of the ladder—where to study and how to study, leaving the third—what to study—for future. Our conclusions are approximations in the present state of our knowledge. This 'Introduction', therefore, does not go beyond this point and is not intended to be a substitute for a 'research work' or 'study'. Its purpose will be amply realised if it arouses interest of the scholarly world to undertake deeper and meaningful studies in future.

While working on the Introduction it was our intention to include a few pages on the agamic and tantric sources of the Tantrāloka and to undertake a division of its contents on such a basis. But as we proceeded on, it occurred to us that in view of the complex and encyclopaedic character of the text and our elementary knowledge we could not possibly touch all the aspects and it would be much better to leave it for future study. It, however, appeared proper to us to share our thinking with the scholars about the lines on which future studies may proceed. Knowing full well there would be many more fruitful ways of doing so, devised by scholarly ingenuity, we venture to set out the following agenda for future attention of the scholars.

1. Our most urgent task is to have a critically edited text of the Tantrāloka and the Viveka. In the foregoing pages we visualised its necessity several times. By the time of Jayaratha the text of the T.A. was eclipsed by corruptions and he gives ample testimony of his having edited and restored the text (e.g., the Viveka on the T.A. 23.23, 23.25, 29.265-66 and 37.4-5 etc.). The printed KSTS edition is in dire need of the same type of approach. An effort is to be made to locate as many MSS as possible and to collate and compare them. This may help settle many such problems as we have seen with regard to the difference in readings between Pandey's MS and the KSTS edition and resulting complications or with regard to several variants given by Jayaratha which are traceable to none of the MSS on which the KSTS edition is based. As a first step, an internal comparative study may be undertaken as we notice variations in the portions referred to or cross-referred to. As a second step, citations appearing in the T.A. and the Viveka may be compared with their original sources wherever available either in print or in MS. This may be done with an historical overview since even some apparently correct readings give rise to historical absurdities (e.g., Bhrātā'pi for Bhartā'pi in the T.A. 37.75). As a third step, a track has to be kept of the situations where Jayaratha, though seldom, is at variance with his master. For example the T.A. 8.406 says something, but it means something else from Jayaratha's comments.

2. As an essential corollary and supplement to the above a comparative study of the cognate but external sources with an appeal to their contents is another primary necessity. To explicate. Abhinavagupta on the one hand conceives, as we have already seen, the Tantrāloka as a logical extension of the M.V.V. and P.T.V., and on the other composes the T.S. and T.V.D. as representative summaries of his magnum opus. By a comprehensive comparison between the contents of the three texts—M.V.V., P.T.V. and T.A—keeping in view their successively progressive character, a fairly compact text of the T.A. may be resurrected. If one more text i.e., the Sv.T., is also added to this list alongwith its commentary Uddyota by Kṣemarāja we may get practically an unassailable text which will ward off many anomalies arising from the textual readings of the existing edition giving us an additional opportunity to take stock of the scholastic bias or over-enthusiasm, if any, of the commentators, be he Jayaratha or Kṣemarāja. In the next stage, a comparision with the T.S. and T.V.D. will bring into focus the relative importance of the issues. The T.S. has 22 Āhnikas and the T.V.D. only 3 as against 37 of the T.A. In the first instance, while it underlines the importance of purely metaphysical theses, it also projects subtle difference between the approaches underlined at the two places. For example, the discussion on Vyākhyāvidhi under Śrutavidhi in both the texts (T.A. and T.S.) may be looked into. In the third stage, once again the internal comparative study ought to be resorted to—this time with reference to the contents and with an intent to loosen the knots. For example, the riddle of Ādi (etc.), Prāk and Purastād (earlier), Vakṣyāmaḥ (will propound later), Agre (later) etc., as appearing in Abhinava and Jayaratha, appears to be quite enigmatic as and when the authors choose to keep mum about their specific places or meanings. This can be resolved by a close comparative investigation alone. Such a study will further take care of other gaps in our understanding. Jayaratha, for instance, explains Anyatra (elsewhere) in the *T.A.*15.521 as Naimittikādau (in the occasionals etc.) and quotes a verse. While Naimittikādau should have immediate reference to the 28th Āhnika, the verse quoted is neither found in the 28th nor in the 15th Āhnika. Similarly, as we have already seen, Jayaratha suggests inclusion of the occasional rite (Naimittika) among the daily rites (Nityakarma) in the 15th Āhnika notwithstanding its apparent misplacement. These two types of complementary enterprises, as outlined in columns 1 and 2, will go a long way in offering a faithful text of the Tantrāloka particularly in view of Abhinava's own admission that his treatment is staggered—i.e, he does not give all information at one place.

3. The Tantrāloka offers magnificent scope for a philosophical study of its thought contents. It is a true reflection of Abhinava's encyclopaedic genius and keen historical sense. It is a complete digest of Śaivism, specially Kashmir Śaivism in all its variety and splendour. Together with the Viveka it serves as a storehouse of knowledge on tantricism and other systems—both speculative and ritualistic. It not only furnishes the reasoned out philosophical theories but also underscores the evolutionary phases through which the major concepts and schools of Śaivism have passed. The theories of freedom (Mokṣa) and ignorance (Mala), cosmological theory of reflection (Bimbapratibimbavāda), tools of freedom—initiation and redemptive knowledge (Dīkṣā and Upāyacatuṣṭaya), cosmic ontology of six passages (Ṣaḍadhva) including Śaiva categoriology of 36 principles (Tattvas), theory of causation (Kartṛkarmabhāva) and trans-causation called manifestation(Ābhāsavāda), its attendant principle of determinism (Niyati) and bearing thereof on freedom of action and fruition of action (Karma-phalavyavasthā), monism through Absolutic dynamism, descent of grace, culmination of determinate thought construct into indeterminate pure thought, theory of knowledge famed as re-cognition, ensuing means of knowledge, parallelism as well as synthesis between Jñāna and Yoga, concept of reality as pure verbum and awareness or theory of reality as meaning which is an aspect of self-transcendence of the word— all these and many more issues provoke a very thorough, lively and intense deliberation. While other works on Kashmir Śaivism like the I.P.K., I.P.V. etc. also discuss the similar issues, the T.A. is distinguished in its treatment by its tantric orientation. The T.A. provides a comprehensive backdrop setting against which philosophical problems are dealt with not in isolation from but as complement to the tantric, esoteric and ritualistic issues. The T.A. excels in tantric symbolism offering a rich insight into tantric esotericism which has been variously styled as Caryākrama, Rahasyaprakriyā, Ādiyāga etc. It is from this point of view that the tantric esotericism is said to have emanated from the sixth source or face known as Yoginīvaktra in contrast (T.A. 6.193) to all the Śaiva systems which are portrayed as proceeding from five faces of Śiva or five sources (Pañcasrotorūpa Bhairava). Thus in order to have a complete philosophical understanding it must combine and synthesize metaphysical, ritualistic, symbolic and esoteric aspects as all of them, both jointly and severally, lead to the attainment of the self-divine. This study will ipso facto concentrate on a comprehensive inventory of all the places where a particular topic has been discussed and also on all its phases through which it has passed in course of evolution to its present state. Besides, Abhinava's aesthetic theory presents a brilliant example of applied metaphysics. The 3rd, 4th and 28th Āhnikas are replete with such references, specially the 3rd is very rich in its observations on aesthetics of music. Any philosophical study worth the name is bound to take all this into account.

4. An historical study is necessitated by the very handling of the source material in the T.A. and Viveka. As we have seen, both Abhinava and Jayaratha display a tremendous historical sense. In the first place, they furnish significant informations about themselves and their ancestral and preceptorial origins. In the second, as observed by Goudriaan,[1] the T.A. comes up as one of the three concrete sources for dating the tantras. Same is the case, we may add, with Jayaratha also. In the third, their contribution in restoring several missing links in the tradition is invaluable. In the fourth, they furnish and handle enormous tantric source material from various periods of history which must be subjected to rigorous historical, chronological and evolutionary scrutiny so that the entire tantric edifice as dwelt upon by Abhinava and Jayaratha may be restored to its original grandeur and authenticity. In so doing we may profitably fall back upon all the available sources of contemporary history of that age—literary, architectural, epigraphical and internal i.e., other works of Abhinava and Jayaratha as well as those of their precursors and successors. Another rich source is provided by the texts from other branches of tantricism spread throughout the country. For instance, the omissions in the Śrīkaṇṭhī's list of the 64 Bhairava Tantras are removed only with reference to the contents of the Pratiṣṭhā-lakṣaṇasāra-samuccaya, a text brought out from Nepal. Even a preliminary study on these lines is bound to yield substantial results. With gaps removed in our understanding we would be better poised for a fuller appreciation of the philosophical content.

5. Another interesting and enlightening field of study may be offered by its evaluation as a source book of new information. Abhinava offers many insights into the history of Indian thought and the then culture of Kashmir. His references to some Naiyāyikas (Keṣāṁcana Naiyāyikānāṁ T.A. 3.12-44), Vairiñca Brahmavādin (T.A.V., III, p. 641), Nāstika philosophers subscribing to the negation of soul and not to the denial of the authority of the Veda (T.A. 6.19-20) invite us to explore this unexplored area. Similarly his presentation of the Kaumārila view on Vedyatā and its lengthy masterly refutation (T.A. 10.21-57) adds new dimensions to our understanding of Kumārila. Abhinava's presentation of Siddhānta Śaivism in the 4th Āhnika in contrast to the sister systems opens a new vista of information throwing new light on the evolution of the dualistic Śaivism in Kashmir. He is an invaluable source of information on Buddhism. He practically refers to all sects of Buddhism so much so that he remains the only source of many exclusive theories of Buddhists. For example "Abhinavagupta, contemporary of Nāropā," observes Naudou[1], "devoted a whole chapter of the Tantrāloka, chapter XXV, to study of the imagination during sleep...." Presentation and criticism of the doctrine of Kālacakra by Abhinavagupta in the 16th Āhnika has elicited the following praise from Naudou[1], "...such criticism constitutes one of the principal sources for knowledge of that Tantric cycle, side by side with the Buddhistic texts themselves, in the front rank of which it is fitting to place the Sekoddeśaṭikā of Nāropā (perhaps a Kashmīri), the only text of the system at this time."

1. Buddhists of Kashmir, p. 180

Jayaratha closely follows his illustrious master both in spirit and approach. His references to Mausula, Kāruka (T.A.V.,II, p. 70), and Pāśupata equip us with new insight into the history of Śaivism. Similarly his references to Ṣaḍaṅga Yoga (4th Āhnika) reflect the continuity of the Buddhist thesis and its assimilation into the Śaiva fold.

Moreover, Abhinava furnishes a lot of geographical data in the 8th Āhnika and subtle cultural information throughout the T.A. These are but a few glimpses. A study fathoming all the new material contained in the pages of this vast text will, indeed, be rewarding.

6. The 35th Āhnika termed as Samastaśāstramelana reminds us of the synthetic Vedāntic effort represented by the phenomenon of Vedāntavākyasamanvaya (synthetic unity of all Vedāntic propositions). It underlies Abhinavagupta's synthetic approach which seeks to view the T.A. as an eclectical organism where one system culminates into the other and so on ultimately culminating into Trika system. Thus Tārkika, Śrauta, Bauddha, Ārhata, Vaiṣṇava, Siddhānta, Vāmaka, Dakṣa, Mata, Kula, Kaula, and Trika move in a hierarchical order. It will be interesting and significant to unearth as to how Abhinava propounds their synthetic progression.[2]

7. The meaning of 'Tantra' as understood by Abhinava is to be investigated. In his T.A. he quotes and alludes to even Śruti (T.A. 3.226) which is an external authority (Bāhya Śāstra) as Tantra. Jayaratha, following his master, even refers to Paurāṇika Prakriyā (Jayaratha on the T.A. 8.58). Abhinava goes on invoking his teachers, scriptures and even secular texts as authority. Now if all these constitute authority what is the precise implication of the word Tantra in Abhinavagupta. He himself distinguishes Tantra from Āgama.[1] His use of the word Tantra in the Tantrāloka and 'Tantra-prakriyā' must of necessity be in two different senses. Because, while Tantra-prakriyā has been distinguished from Kulaprakriyā on all the three counts namely, Mantra, Ādhāra and Itikartavyatā (T.A. 29.5-8)., both have been subsumed under Tantrāloka. If the meaning were identical at both the places, Kulaprakriyā would have remained outside the domain of the Tantrāloka.

Such study will bring Abhinava's attitude towards tantra and several tantric systems into bold relief. In this connection one more topical issue may be raised. As we have pointed out elsewhere[2], there was an acute controversy with regard to the exact status of Spanda system i.e., whether it was an independent system or a part of Trika system. Abhinava obviously joins the second group because while paying glowing tributes to Kallaṭa, the author of the Sp.K., he does not accord a separate status to Spanda system. Now under Kula-prakriyā only one system i.e., Kula system, finds mention, whereas Tantraprakriyā subsumes Krama, Trika and Pratyabhijñā within itself. What is then the locus standi of Spanda according to Abhinavagupta?

Even though we are not sure of the meaning of the term 'Tantra' in the Tantrāloka, there is no doubt that all the three classified authoritative sources—experience, scripture and reason—have been frequently drawn upon.[3] The entire subject matter of the T.A. is somehow based on at least one of these sources. Sometimes a particular point is based on more than one authority also. Abhinavagupta has exploited every opportunity to tell or point out his source of authority. For instance, the treatment of Kāla

(time) is based on all the three sources.[1] Rise of Cakra is based on experience and scripture (T.A. 7.71), while the pure universality of the divine on experience and reason (T.A. 3.44). Similarly Abhiṣekavidhi is an exclusively agamic phenomenon (T.A. 23.1 & 23.103). Abhinava does not remain content with general description of the source. He even prefers to identify the source. For instance, his theory of scriptural unity (Śāstramelana) is ascribed to Śambhunātha (T.A. 35.44), the brief procedure (Saṁkṣiptavidhi) is traced to the Dikṣottara and Kiraṇā (T.A. 18.11). Abhinavagupta thus affords us a clear peep into his sources of topic-wise treatment. A complete chart drawn on these lines will enable us to know Abhinavan mind and appreciate the thematic unity of apparently divergent sources much better.

8. Jayaratha throws some esoteric hints in all his benedictory verses in each Āhnika. A clear understanding of the same will help us understand Jayaratha better.

9. Abhinavagupta has employed about 76 illustrations (Dṛṣṭānta) to exemplify his stand on various matters. These illustrations are interspread throughout the Tantrāloka. A complete estimate of these illustrative instances will present Abhinavan thinking in a much more lucid way.

10. On the strength of the material provided by Abhinava and Jayaratha, critical studies of the Śrīpūrvaśāstra alias Mālinīvijayottaratantra (vide T.A. 13.212-253, 15.4-7, 21.2-5 etc.), Svaccandatantra and Parātriṁśikā may be undertaken. Such studies will indeed further our understanding of the T.A. and vice versa.

The agenda, as outlined above, do not exhaust the areas or directions of research. They simply underline the beginning of our quest to understand Abhinava and his celebrated text.

1. An incomplete manuscript titled Aghoratantra (No. C91) is available in the Āryabhāṣā Pustakālaya, Varanasi. Brij Vallabh Dvivedi, on the authority of the T.A. 25.58, finds it to be identical with the Svacchanda Tantra. If it is so, it has been published in KSTS in six volumes (Vol. V in two parts) with the Uddyota by Kṣemarāja.

2. Identical with the Aitareyopaniṣad. Brought out with Śaṁkara's commentary by Gita Press, Gorakhpur alongwith 10 other principal Upaniṣads in 3 volumes.

3. Eight MSS of one Ānandatantra—five complete, one incomplete and two with the commentary of Navasiṁhācārya—are available in the Government Oriental Manuscript Library, Madras. The MSS are numbered as D5562-69 and R-5314. The India Office Library Catalogue lists a complete MS bearing No. 2541 (Tā. Sā. p. 45). One Ānandaśāsana is noticed as referred to in the New Cat. Cat., II, p. 118 (Upodghāta., p. 20).

4. The Anantakārikā is Ādhārakārikā, published in KSTS as the Paramārthasāra with Yogarāja's commentary. It is a Śaivite adaptation of the Vaiṣaṇava/Yoga original which has been published along with the commentary of Rāghavānanda in Acyutagranthamālā.

Gnoli (Rome). Also published in KSTS with Rājānaka Lāsaka's commentary called Lāsakī or Laghuvṛtti.

6-7. Four incomplete MSS of the Bhairava Tantra are reported to be extant—one, at the Āryabhāṣā Pustakālaya, Varanasi (No. C2927), second at B.H.U. (No. 5446), third at the K.S. Sanskrit University, Darbhanga (No. 296 [12]) and fourth at Bhārata Itihāsa Saṁśodhaka Maṇḍala, Poona (No. BL 12165). The Tā. Sā. (p. 449) lists one MS at the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal (No. 6041).

8. By now we know of seven MSS viz.,—the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal (6392), the Curator's Office Library, Trivendram (T982) and the Darbar Library, Nepal (3/370, 1/296, 1/1160, 1/1557 and 1/147). According to the Tā.Sā. (p. 429), the Trivendrum catalogue lists one more MS as 1103 B and that of the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal lists one at No. 5892. All are incomplete but two are quite large. Mark Dyczkowski is presently working on its critical edition.

9. One MS named Cintāmaṇi is listed at Trivendrum (COL 6888) but, perhaps it is not the one in question, since Jayaratha interprets Cintāmaṇi as the Tattvārthacintāmaṇi, a non-extant work by Kallaṭa.

10. We learn of one Ḍāmaraka Tantra at Adyar (No. 6041). But we are not sure if it is the one we are looking for. One Ḍāmaratantra is also listed in the catalogue of the Sanskrit University, Varanasi (No. 24385). Vide Tā.Sā., p. 227

11 & 19. The Nepal Darbar Library, according to Dvivedi (Upodghāta., p. 28), stores a MS of some Matagahvarpañcāśītikā. It is, however, open to doubt if it is one with the Kulagahvara.

12. Published in numerous editions.

13. The Īśānaśivapaddhati is not to be confused with the Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati which has been edited and published by T. Ganapati Shastri in two volumes. (Upodghāta., p. 209, fn. 3).

14. See fn. 45 below.

A. Sanderson (Oxford) is working on a critical edition of this text.

16. According to Dvivedi (Upodghāta., pp. 217-18), the Kālottara is Triṁśikākālottara which is another name of the Mataṅgapārameśvara. The latter with Rāmakaṇṭha's commentary has been brought out by the French Institute of Indology, Pondichery. We gather that R. Torrella (Rome) is bringing out a critical edition of the same. One Devīkālottarāgama has been included in the 2nd volume of the Tantrasaṁgraha published from the Sanskrit University, Varanasi. However, two MSS, one named as Kalottara-mahātantra and the other as Kalottaratantra, have been noticed in Jodhpur collection (No. 290) and the Oriental Research Institute, Baroda (No. 791).

17. Previously the Kāmikāgama was published in two volumes in Grantha script from Madras. It was reprinted in Nāgarī script as Pūrvakāmika (Part I, ed. Svamināthaśivācārya) by Dakṣiṇabhāratārcakasaṁgha and as Uttarakāmika (Part II) by Civaña Napotayantraśālai, Cintatripeṭṭai, Madras.

18. First published from Devakoṭṭai, Tirupati in 1932 in Grantha script. One MS has been listed at the French Institute of Indology, Pondichery (MS No. 290).

19. See Fn. 11 above.

20. According to Jayaratha (on T.A. 29.56) it is a section of the Tantrarāja-bhaṭṭāraka which, according to A. Padoux, is identical with the Jayadrathayāmala and is being brought out by A. Sanderson, Oxford University (Upodghāta., p. 219). It is perhaps identical with the Śiraścheda.

21-22. Published in KSTS as Mālinīvijayottara-tantra.

23. Published in KSTS.

24-26. Published in KSTS as Mālinīvijayottara-tantra.

28-29. Published with Rāmakaṇṭha's commentary by the French Institute of Indology, Pondichery as Mātaṅgapārameśvarāgama (Kriyāpāda, Yogapāda and Caryāpāda).

two (COL1642/A and -/B) in those of the Curator's Library, Trivendrum. The Tā.Sā (P. 512) notes two MSS in the Trivendrum collection at 1017A and -B. It also talks of one more MS, complete whereabouts of which have not been furnished.

31-32. An incomplete MS of the Maukuṭāgama is found in BORI, Poona (BL 11428) and that of the Makuṭāgama at Baroda (6827/C). The Tā.Sā. (p. 517) notices one Mukuṭasaṁhitā in the India Office Catalogue on page 840.

33. Jñāna and Yoga Pādas with Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha's commentary published from Kashmir in KSTS as Mṛgendra-tantram and Caryā and Kriyā Pādas from Pondichery as well as from Devakoṭṭai as Mṛgendra-āgama.

34. Gonda (Medieval Religious Literature, p. 206, fn. 165) identifies it with the Netratantra which is published in KSTS. If so it is one with the Amṛteśa (Upodghāta, p. 14), (Tā.Sā. p. 16-17).

35. Available in the MS form under several titles e.g., Niḥśvāsatattvasaṁhitā (I/277), Niḥśvāsatantra (I/279) and Niḥśvāsākhyamahātantra. The first two are listed in the Darbar Library, Nepal. See Tā.Sā. p. 342; Upodghāta, p. 45; New Cat. Cat. III, p. 64. A MS of the Pratiṣṭhātantra, being a part of the Niḥśvāsamahātantra, is listed in the Darbar Library, Nepal catalogue (I/1003). We learn from Dvivedi, T. Goudriaan from Holland is critically editing the Niḥśvāsamahātantra (Upodghāta, p. 47).

36-37. Listed in the Tantra catalogue of the Darbar Library, Nepal (Vol. I, p. 227). Its number is 1/1606.

38. See Tā.Sā. p. 335. It appears to be a generic name. But if it is identical with the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava, it is published with the Setubandha of Bhāskararāya in Ānandāśrama Series and with the Artharatnāvalī and Ṛjuvimarśinī by the S.S. University, Varanasi.

39. We know of three MSS, all named Pauṣkarāgama—one at Baroda (6827 a), second at the Punjab University Library, Lahore (number not available) and third, with a commentary by Jñānaprakāśācārya (4395) at VVRI, Hoshiarpur. According to the Tā.Sā. (p. 388) one more MS (2606) is listed in the India Office Library catalogue and one (6827C) in the Oriental Institute, Baroda.

40. H.P. Shastri records in his Notices (2nd Series) a MS at No. 1/306 (Tā.Sā., p. 548).

41-43. Published in two volumes by the French Institute of Indology, Pondichery as Rauravāgama.

44. One incomplete but large MS titled Santānasaṁhitā is said to be available in the Palace Library of Tanjore and is listed at No. 11408 (Tā.Sā., p. 673).

45. See fn. 14 above also. Identical with Jñānottara. Published by Muttaiya Pillai from Devakoṭṭai, Tirupati in 1923 (Upodghāta, p. 74). The Tā.Sā. (pp. 685-686) refers to a MS of Aghoraśivācārya's commentary on it. A MS of the Jñānottarayogasāstra (C 99) is reported to be available in the BHU collection (Upodghāta, p. 35).

46. A MS called Siddhāmata is listed in the catalogue of the Punjab University, Lahore (1643).

47. According to the Tā.Sā. (p. 697) its MSS are available in the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal (5948) and also in the Darbar Library (2/32). The India Office Library also lists one MS in the catalogue. Mark Dyczkowski records two MSS at the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal (3917 and 5465) and one at Nepal National Archives (5/2403).

53. Published in KSTS in six volumes (Volume V has two parts) with Kṣemarāja's Uddyota. See fn. 1 above.

54. Dvivedi informs us about the availability of one incomplete MS at the French Institute, Pondichery (Upodghāta., p. 83).

55. One incomplete MS is reported to be present at Pondichery (Upodghāta., p. 82).

56. Published in 12 Volumes in KSTS with Jayaratha's commentary, now being reprinted by Motilal Banarsidass.

57. A MS is said to be available in the Darbar Library, Nepal as per the Tantra catalogue, Vol. II, p. 204. Its photo-transcript is available with Mark Dyczkowski (1/363 at Nepal National Archives).

58. For details see Ist chapter of the present work. It is different from Abhinava's text of the same name published in KSTS. According to the Tā.Sā. (p. 246) there is one MS in the S.S. University, Varanasi (25452), ascribed to one Siddhanātha.

59. Published in KSTS with Abhinavagupta's Vivaraṇa and Lāsaka's Lāsaki. Also see fn. 5 above.

60. Identical with the Mālinīvijayottara. Published in KSTS.

61. Two MSS of the Vīra-tantra are found listed in the Royal Asiatic Society collection (3161 and 9347) and six MSS entitled Vīrāgama are found in the Madras collection (R 1761, D5502-4, D5498-99). According to the Tā.Sā (pp. 602-603), the Royal Asiatic Society has two MSS of the Vīratantra (5925, 6146), the Nepal Darbar Library has two (2/246 Ca and 2/125) and the Baṅgīya Sāhitya Pariṣad has one (1409). According to the same source (Tā.Sā. p. 604) Rajendra Lal Mitra records in his Notices two MSS at Sl. No. 229 and 268. Similarly one Vīrāgama is taken note of in the Palace Library of Tanjore (6721).

62. According to Dvivedi he sighted one of its MSS in a list in the possession of late Prof. V.S. Agrawal. There is one more MS (C776) in the B.H.U. collection.

63. One MS captioned Yoginīsañcāra is included in the catalogue of the Darbar Library, Nepal (4/78).

3. There are two works referred to in the Darbar Library, Nepal. One is the Kālikākulakramasadbhāva (I/76) and the other is the Kālikākulapañcakramārcana by Vimalaprabodha whose two MSS are listed, one incomplete (I/169) and the other complete (3/314). We are told A. Sanderson (Oxford) is working on these texts. The Kālikākrama, also known as Devikākrama in other sources (see our K.T., p. 235-36), is perhaps an abridged version of either of these two texts.

4. In the Curator's Office Library we find a MS entitled Kāpālikatantra numbered as 7475 and listed under Śāktatantra.

10. Published in KSTS with Utpala's own Vṛtti alongwith Saṁbandhasiddhi, Ajaḍapramātṛsiddhi and Īśvarasiddhi under the title Siddhitrayī. Critical editions of the complete Vṛtti by Utpala is under preparation of HP Alper (Dallas) and R. Torrella (Rome). Also published in KSTS with Abhinavagupta's Vimarśinī (two volumes) and Vivṛtivimarśinī (three volumes) entitled respectively as Īśvarapratyabhijñāvimarśinī and Īśvarapratyābhijñāvivṛtivimarśinī. Later published by KC Pandey under the title Bhāskarī (two volumes) alongwith Abhinava's Vimarśinī and Bhāskarakaṇṭha's Bhāskarī. The same with a large commentary by an anonymous author edited by Pandey and the present author is shortly coming out from Motilal Banarsidass.

11. It seems to be a scribal mistake for the Śrīpūrvaśāstra which is none other than the Mālinīvijayottara. See Appendix I.

20. Published with Jayaratha's commentary in KSTS captioned as the Vāmakaśvarīmatavivaraṇa. This is identical with the Vāmakeśvaratantra and has two parts, namely—Yoginīhṛdaya and Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava. The Yoginīhṛdaya has been brought out in Prince of Wales, Saraswati Bhawan Series with Amṛtānanda's Dīpikā and the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava in Anandāśrama Sanskrit Series alongwith Bhāskararāya's Setubandha. The Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava has been again brought out by S. Sanskrit University, Varanasi together with the Ṛjuvimarśinī by Śivānanda and the Artharatnāvalī by Vidyānanda. B.V. Dvivedi, Varanasi and Andre Padoux, Paris are engaged in bringing out a critical edition of the Yoginīhṛdaya with Dīpikā togetherwith its translation into French.

21. Published in KSTS with the commentaries of Kṣemarāja (partly) and Śivopādhyāya in one volume and with that of Bhaṭṭa Ānanda in an other volume, bound in one. Later published by L. Silburn under the title Le Vijñāna Bhairava, text and commentary translated into French under the Institute of Indian Civilization Series. Text with English translation by Jaidev Singh and Hindi/Sanskrit Commentaries by B.V. Dvivedi both published by Motilal Banarsidass.

22. T. Goudriaan has recently brought out a critical edition and English translation under the title Vīṇāsikhā-tantra: A Śaiva Tantra Of The Left Current (Delhi, 1985).

23. Two MSS are listed in the catalogue of the Palace Library of Tanjore (650A, 651B). The Tā. Sā. lists some MSS with the jyotsnā commentary (p. 60).

*Of late we learn from Mark Dyczkowski that one MS of the Śivadharmottara is deposited in the Nepal National Archives (4/531). From him we also learn that the Devīpañcaśatika, Sārdhaśatika and Kramasadbhāva have been edited by Sanderson from Nepali MSS but are awaiting publication. The Śiraścheda is identical with the Jayadrathayāmala and Tantrarāja-bhaṭṭāraka which are preserved in Nepalese MSS. See Appendix I also.

3. SIXTYFOUR BHAIRAVA TANTRAS AND THEIR EIGHTFOLD CLASSIFICATION IN THE GROUPS OF 8 EACH IN THE ŚRĪKAṆṬHĪ AS REFERRED TO BY JAYARATHA.*

(I) Bhairavāṣṭaka
1. Svacchanda
2. Caṇḍa
3. Bhairava
4. Krodha
5. Unamattabhairava
6. Asitāṅga
7. Mahocchuṣma
8. Kapālīśa

(II) Yāmalāṣṭaka
1. Brahmayāmala
2. Visnuyāmala
3. Svacchanda
4. Ruru
5. Ātharvaṇa
6. Rudra
7. Vetāla

(III) Matāṣṭaka

8. Sarvamaṅgalā

(V) Cakrāṣṭaka
1. Mantracakra

(VI) Bahurūpāṣṭaka
1. Andhaka

* Going by the assertion of Jayaratha there are sixty four tantras as enumerated in the Śrīkaṇṭhī. But, a perusal of the relevant extracts shows only 63 Āgamas, omitting one in the Yāmala group (there are only 7 Yāmalas named). Dvivedi omits one Tantra namely Bhairava (under Bhairavāṣṭaka) and adds four more e.g., Uḍḍīśa, Kukkuṭākhya, Kubjikā and Rurubhairava (Upodghāta, pp. 94-111) admittedly as per Śrīkaṇṭhī. His total comes to 66 instead of 63 or 64. We have, however, not been able to trace the textual support from the extracts of the Śrīkaṇṭhī as cited by Jayaratha (T.A.V., I, pp. 39-44) either for these omissions or additions. Also see Abhi., pp. 141-143.

ĪŚVARA-PRATYABHIJÑĀ-VIMARŚINĪ
Sanskrit Text with English Translation
K.A.S. Iyer and K.C. Pandey

Īśvara-Pratyabhijñā-Vimarśinī or the Doctrine of Divine Recognition is the most important work of the Pratyabhijñā school of Kashmir Śaivism. This is a commentary by the great Abhinavagupta on the Īśvara-Pratyabhijñā-Sūtra of Utpala, expounded by the commentary Bhāskarī of Bhāskarakaṇṭha. The original text with Vimarśinī and the Bhāskarī thereon was edited and published by Dr. K. C. Pandey and Professor K. A. Subramania Iyer along with English translation of the Īśvara-Pratyabhijñā-Vimarśinī.

These works were out of print for long and are now reissued under the general title of Īśvara-Pratyabhijñā-Vimarśinī of Abhinavagupta in three volumes.

INTRODUCTION TO THE TANTRĀLOKA
Navjivan Rastogi

In this Volume an attempt is made to unravel the technique of the Tantrāloka and bring it within the range of comprehensibility. Scattered but obvious information about its contents is ingeniously pieced together; their organic treatment and guiding norms characterizing intellectual approach of the two master minds—Abhinavagupta and Jayaratha—are skilfully brought to the surface; the environ... and personal details of the author of Tantrāloka and its commentator are described to deepen ...miliarity with them.

...uss... n a compass of five chapters covers the ...ork of the principal text and biographical ...and its commentator. The structural analysis ...s extended in twenty appendices throwing ... unexplored regions of the contents. The ...dds to the richness of the whole work.
